Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales in respect of paragraph 4 of schedule 14 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981: (a) how many notices of appeal against decisions of surveying authorities not to make definitive map modification orders he has received, (b) where a decision has been made on appeal, if he will state in each case the nature of the decision, the direction, if any, given to the surveying authority, the number of weeks which elapsed between the receipt of the appeal and the issuing of the decision, and (c) how many appeals are currently outstanding, with, in each case, the number of weeks which have elapsed since they were received by the Department.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Three notices of appeal have been received. They have been with my Department for 66 weeks, 19 weeks and nine weeks, respectively. In the first of these cases all the necessary background information was not received until January this year. In the other cases such information is outstanding. No decisions have been issued to date.

Clwyd (Map)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to complete the holding of inquiries into objections to the draft revised definitive map for Clwyd and the subsequent issue decisions.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: All nine inquiries have been held and final decisions have been issued in respect of one. Proposed decision letters have been issued in respect of six of the others and the remaining two are expected to issue during the summer. If hearings for persons who consider they may be adversely affected by the proposed decisions are required in every case, the process may not be completed until the latter half of 1986.

SCOTLAND

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the programme of action on women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Younger: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used in my Department to take forward the recommendations in the programme of action on such matters as promotion, training and part-time working.

Minister's Correspondence

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of his reply to the letter from the secretary of the Electricity Consultative Council for the south of Scotland district dated 25 February 1985.

Mr. Younger: My Department replied on 11 March as follows:

"Thank you for your letter of 25 February conveying your Council's views on the Government's proposals for Nationalised Industries Legislation. I have noted the Council's views, and they will be taken into account in the Government's consideration of the results of the consultation exercise. You mentioned in particular the possibility of further proposals about the operation of Nationalised Industry Consumer Councils and, as you are aware, a further consultation document has now been issued on that subject."

Sentencing Policy (Statistics)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) of all prisoners sentenced to the short sharp shock treatment, how many have subsequently been given other custodial sentences and how many have not;

(2) how many prisoners have undergone sentences involving the short sharp shock treatment by institution, year and length of sentence since its inception;

(3) how many prisoners sentenced to the short sharp shock treatment have previously been detained in other institutions by year and type of institution;

(4) how many prisoners have been sentenced to the short sharp shock treatment on more than one occasion by year and institution.

Mr. Ancram: The "short sharp shock treatment" is the colloquial phrase for the sentence of young offenders to detention in a detention centre, which was introduced by the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1949. The numbers of receptions to detention centres in Scotland since the first one opened in 1960 are as follows:

Year	Receptions
1962	317
1963	477
1964	613
1965	575
1966	723
1972	1,083
1973	975
1974	963
1975	1,043
1978	919
1979	591
1980	834
1981	729
1982	862
1983	889

*January to August.

Under the terms of the 1949 Act, the term of detention during the years 1960-63 could not exceed three months. A breakdown of receptions by sentence length is available in the Scottish Home and Health Department's annual reports "Prisons in Scotland" published by HMSO for these years. Under the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1963—implemented on 1 November 1963—the sentence became a fixed term of three months. Since section 45 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 was implemented on 15 November 1963 sentences may vary, generally between 28 days and four months. For the period January to August 1984 the breakdown was as follows:

Length	Number
Under 28 days	*8
28 days	15
30 days	103
1 month	13
30-60 days	15
60 days	188
2 months	36
60-90 days	3
90 days	23
3 months	549
90-120 days	2
120 days	5
4 months	108
Over 4 months	†2

*These would be additional warrants served on an inmate already subject to a detention centre sentence.

†This is possible under the terms of section 207(7) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975.

Information on the previous custodial sentences served by inmates received at detention centres is available in "Prisons in Scotland" until 1982. This information has not been published since 1982 as it is based on the recollection of inmates on admission. The relevant figures since 1982 are as follows:

Year	DC receptions	Previous sentence(s) in DC	Borstal	YOI
1984*	1,070	286	177	290

DC—Detention Centre.
YOI—Young Offenders Institution.
* January to August.

Breakdowns of this and the other information by institution are not available except at disproportionate cost. There are no official figures available on how many inmates released from detention centres have subsequently been given other custodial sentences.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in the public sector have been lost (a) in Scotland and (b) in the United Kingdom over the last 12 months as a result of the sale of Forestry Commission land.

Mr. John MacKay: The sale of land has not been a major factor in the reduction in the Forestry Commission's work force in recent years. Furthermore, no job losses in the last 12 months can be directly and solely attributed to such sales.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current total acreage of forest estates held throughout Great Britain by the Forestry Commission; and what is the estimated value of these estates.

Mr. John MacKay: The area of woodland managed by the Forestry Commission at 31 March 1984—the latest date for which figures are available—was 909,959 hectares, valued at £1,220 million.

Conservation

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to ensure that sites of exceptional scenic or scientific interest that are on Forestry Commission land which has been sold or will be sold will be maintained.

Mr. John MacKay: When the Forestry Commission sells land which is covered by a statutory designation, such as a site of special scientific interest, the features of the land, including its trees, continue to enjoy the degree of protection afforded by such designation.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to ensure public access to sites of exceptional scenic interest that are on Forestry Commission land which has been sold or is planned to be sold.

Mr. John MacKay: The extent to which the public visit a Forestry Commission site because of its scenic interest is taken into full account by the commission in selecting properties for sale. Public rights of way are not, of course, affected by a change of ownership. I am not aware of any site of exceptional scenic interest to which the public have been denied access following sale by the commission.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Charges

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the proposed water charges for unmeasured water supply for 1985-86 for each water authority in England and Wales, and the percentage increase this represents against the 1984-85 level of charges.

Mr. Macfarlane: Full details of the average increase in bills for water services provided by Water authorities in 1985-86 are not yet available. However, the following table compares the unmeasured water supply charges for 1984-85 with those for 1985-86.

Unmeasured Water Supply Charges

Olympic Games

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which body should represent London in consultations about the possible holding of the Olympic Games there if Parliament agrees to the Government's proposals to abolish the Greater London council.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 25 February.

Education (Rate Expenditure)

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of rates set for the current year will be accounted for by expenditure on education.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities in England have budgeted to spend £10·1 billion on education in 1984-85. This represents 47 per cent. of all local authority net current expenditure. Rate income (net of domestic rate relief grant and rate rebates for the year) is estimated to be £11·1 billion.

Tobacco Companies (Sponsorship)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the British Medical Association; if the sponsorship of sporting events by tobacco companies was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I last met the British Medical Association on 7 February. We discussed sports sponsorship by tobacco companies and the voluntary agreement between the industry and the Government which restricts it. I shall, of course, take the BMA's views into account in considering the voluntary agreement, which runs until at least 31 December 1985.

Nature Conservancy Council (Compensation Payments)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make available sufficient resources to meet the obligations of compensation payments paid by the Nature Conservancy Council under management agreements in sites of special scientific interest in relation to past and future agreements.

Mr. Waldegrave: The provision for the Nature Conservancy Council grant-in-aid for 1985-86 will be increased to £22·7 million, subject to the approval of Parliament. It is for the Nature Conservancy Council to decide how precisely to allocate the resources available to it, but adequate provision has been made for payments under management agreements. Requirements for future years will be considered in the light of the NCC's corporate plan.

Mortgage Defaults

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of mortgage defaults in 1983 and the first half of 1984.

Sir George Young: On the basis of English local authorities' returns, it is estimated that during the financial year 1983-84 the authorities repossessed about 840 dwellings which had been mortgaged to them, and at the end of the year about 14,500 mortgagors were in arrears for six months or more, including 4,600 who had bought council houses. Corresponding estimates of building societies for 1983 and the first half of 1984 appear in the Building Societies Association publication "Mortgage Repayment Difficulties", which is available in the Library.

Information on county court action for mortgage possessions in England and Wales in 1983, is contained in table 11.10 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1973-1983", which is also available in the Library.

Pool Betting Duty

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Football League concerning the implications of the level of pool betting duty for expenditure on crowd safety improvements at football grounds.

Mr. Macfarlane: None, save that the president of the Football League has copied to me his letter to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in support of a reduction in pools betting duty, but that letter does not examine the implications for expenditure on crowd safety improvements at football grounds.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Free Prescriptions

4. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now take steps to ensure that all those in receipt of invalidity benefit qualify for free prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Over 20 per cent. of invalidity benefit recipients are already automatically exempt; and all the remainder can seek exemption, for example, on low income grounds. Those who do not qualify can purchase prepayment certificates if they need frequent or regular prescriptions .

With over 72 per cent. of prescribed items going to those who are exempt and about 6 per cent. to holders of prepayment certificates, there is no need to add to the exempt categories.

Management Costs

12. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the steps his Department is taking to reduce management costs.

Mr. Fowler: Departmental running costs have been falling in real terms for several years. despite a substantial increase in work load, particularly in social security operations. In the Health Service, between 1980 and 1984, regional health authorities reduced percentage of their resources they spent on management by over 14 per cent.

Benefit (Study Courses)

14. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has for easing the rule whereby persons pursuing a course of study for more than 21 hours a week are ineligible for benefit.

Mr. Whitney: None.

Privatisation

16. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what current plans he has for privatising services controlled by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are continuing to seek ways of extending competitive tendering in the Health Service and in our Department itself.

Funeral Costs

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider changing the single payment regulations to allow payments to be made to offset funeral costs.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to amend the regulations which already provide for payments to be made to those receiving supplementary benefit for essential funeral expenses.

Limited List Prescribing

18. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the publicity campaign to advise doctors and their patients on the operation of the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A leaflet is being prepared for issue to patients through general practitioners and pharmacists. We will be issuing a circular giving details of the implementation of the selected list to all doctors and pharmacists.

22. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the procedure and criteria for new drugs and existing drugs with new indications to be added to his limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As soon as possible.

38. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to extend the limited list for prescribing to other categories of drugs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no present plans to do so.

44. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reaction he has received so far from interested parties concerning his announcement of the limited National Health Service drugs list.

46. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the response from the medical profession to his revised limited list proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Most patients, doctors and pharmacists have welcomed the expansion of the number of drugs on the selected list which was announced on 21 February. The British Medical Association and the pharmaceutical industry, however, continue to oppose the selected list as a policy.

63. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further discussions he has had with the medical profession about arrangements to revise his proposed limited list of drugs, prescribable under the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have already announced that we intend to set up a professional committee to advise us on a continuing basis on the contents of the list. We hope to consult the medical and pharmaceutical professions about membership of this committee as soon as possible.

Elderly Persons

19. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is proposing in relation to the inspection and registration of homes for the elderly.

Mr. John Patten: Regulations to improve and strengthen the powers of local authorities in carrying out their responsibilities for the registration and inspection of these homes were brought into force on 1 January 1985. The Department's social work service is carrying out a study which initially is designed to establish the cost to authorities of doing this work effectively.

29. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the withdrawal of local authority sponsorship from elderly people already living in residential accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a few representations through the National Council for Voluntary Organisations and direct from organisations running homes. There is no legal obligation on local authorities to provide residential care for every person who needs it; in deciding priorities for available resources, they take account of other sources of funding, including supplementary benefit, available to those in need of such care. The desirability of sponsorship is a matter for the particular local authority to decide in an individual case.

48. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the increase in demand for personal social services by the increasing number of very old people.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have recognised that demographic changes nationally are placing pressures upon personal social services and have made allowance for this in the indicative expenditure figures for their service published in the 1985 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428).

Portable Pensions

20. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a statement on his proposals for legislation to introduce personal portable pensions.

Mr. Newton: Our personal pensions proposals are being developed in the context of the social security review. We hope to announce proposals for change following the review in the course of the next few months.

Social Security Review

21. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff of his Department are currently engaged in the social security review.

Mr. Newton: Many staff in the Department are engaged, directly or indirectly, in the work of the review. No central record is kept of the total number who are involved.

45. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he has had with the private sector pensions and insurance industry as part of the review of social security.

Mr. Whitney: All the major representative bodies in the pensions and insurance industries were specifically invited to submit written evidence to the inquiry into provision for retirement. Most did so, as did many individual companies and people working in those industries. In addition, five representative bodies gave oral evidence at two public sessions each, and two individual companies each took part in one public session.

61. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the further progress of his social security review.

Mr. Whitney: We are currently considering our conclusions and will announce our proposals as soon as possible.

Griffiths Report

23. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Griffiths report.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to report that health authorities are making good progress in making the changes envisaged in the Griffiths report, including the appointment of general managers.

Within our Department the health services supervisory board has been set up and the chairman of the NHS management board, Mr. Victor Paige, has recently been appointed. I am considering with Mr. Paige what further changes are required.

Ancillary Workers (Pay Claim)

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions are currently taking place on the National Health Service ancillary workers' pay claim.

Mr. John Patten: A pay claim on behalf of NHS ancillary staff for 1985-86 was submitted at a meeting of the ancillary staffs Whitley Council on 13 February and confirmed in writing on 27 February. The claim is now being considered by the management side of the Whitley Council.

Severe Disablement Allowance

25. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the introduction of severe disablement allowance will be completed.

Mr. Newton: The remaining age group will be brought into the new benefit from 28 November this year.

Mental Health Act Commission (Report)

26. Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the first annual report of the Mental Health Act Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Mental Health Act Commission is required, by section 121(10) of the Mental Health Act 1983, to produce a report on its activities in the second year after its establishment and subsequently every second year. We expect to receive the first such report in August this year and we shall lay a copy before both Houses.

National Health Service Commissioner

27. Mrs. Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to amend section 119 of the National Health Service Act 1977 so as to enable hon. Members who submit cases to the National Health Service Commissioner to be informed of the outcome of those cases.

Mr. John Patten: We will consider this when there is a suitable opportunity for legislation.

Resettlement Unit and Re-establishment Centre, Field Lane, Liverpool

28. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received respecting his intention to close the resettlement unit and re-establishment centre in Field lane, Liverpool; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We have received a number of representations concerning the future of Fazakerley resettlement unit and re-establishment centre that have expressed concern at the possibility of its closure. Our response has reflected my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 5 February, at column 548.

Departmental Staffing, Leicester

30. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the ratio of his Department's staff to supplementary benefit claimants at the Lower Hill street, Leicester office of his Department in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively; and what it is now.

Mr. Whitney: The departmental local office complementing system—a guide to which is in the Library—provides for the determination of local office complements, that is, the number of staff required to deal with the estimated continuing work load, and their adjustment as work load levels change.

The average number of supplementary benefit claimants in April each year and the staff allocated to supplementary benefit work under the complementing system are as follows:

Year	Number of claimants	Staff
1979-80	8,547	69
1980-81	8,231	74
1981-82	8,546	79
1982-83	9,806	77
1984-85	12,560	77

I must stress that direct comparisons between numbers of staff and claimants are misleading as work loads vary considerably by type and duration of claim and the action that has to be taken. All these factors vary over time as a result of legislative, policy and procedural changes. Examples of such changes are the introduction of postal claim forms for the unemployed and housing benefit.

Disablement Survey

31. Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his survey on the extent of disablement will be completed.

Mr. Newton: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will carry out interviews in relation to disabled adults and children in the community from July to November this year, and in relation to disabled people in institutions next year. This is a very substantial research project and it is too early to say when first results will be available.

Patients (Nursing Care)

32. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will encourage regional health authorities to review their policy with respect to the long term use of hospital beds by patients whose predominant need is nursing care.

Mr. John Patten: Our aim is for patients whose predominant need is for nursing care to be looked after in small, homely units, close to their families and friends. This policy is well known to health authorities and many are developing innovative approaches to care away from a hospital setting. We ourselves have introduced the concept of nurse managed homes for such patients within the National Health Service and three experimental homes have been opened in the last two years.

NHS (Privatisation)

33. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implementation of the privatisation plans within the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I assume the hon. Member is referring to competitive tendering for support services, and I refer him to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 26 February at columns 143-46.

Solihull (Hearing Centres)

34. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement regarding the availability of hearing centres within reasonable travelling distance of Solihull.

Mr. Newton: The availability of hearing aid centres is a matter for the regional health authority. I understand, however, that there are a number of such centres which are readily accessible to residents in Solihull.

Departmental Staff

35. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much staffing levels in his Department's headquarters have declined since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The number of staff employed in the headquarters unit of the Department was reduced by 19 per cent. between 1979 and 1984 from 6,675 on 1 April 1979 to 5,384 on 1 April 1984. This compares with an overall reduction of 14 per cent. in Civil Service manpower during the same period.

NHS (Management)

36. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many outsiders have been appointed to management positions in the National Health Service following the Griffiths recommendations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Of the 155 general managers so far appointed, 21 are from outside the National Health Service.

Surrogate Motherhood

37. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to outlaw surrogate motherhood.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke : I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 7 March at column 1188.

Supplementary Benefit (Board and Lodging)

39. Mr. John Townend asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what amount has been paid out in board and lodging benefits for the years 1979-80 to 1983-84; and what is the estimated expenditure for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Whitney: Annual spending on supplementary benefit for people in all forms of board and lodging accommodation, based on the annual statistical inquiry showing the position at December of each year, is given in the table. 1983 figures are provisional. Estimates are not yet available for December 1985, although on the basis of present trends we have indicated there would be a further dramatic increase if no action were taken to curb expenditure.

1979	62
1980	94
1981	138
1982	205
1983	372
1984*	570

* Estimate.

41. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from Scotland concerning proposed changes in his Department's board and lodgings allowances.

Mr. Whitney: A list of all those organisations and individuals who made represenations to the Social Security Advisory Committee about the proposals on board and lodging payments has been placed in the Library.

NHS Hospital Beds (Women)

40. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds reserved for women are available in National Health Service hospitals run by women.

Mr. John Patten: The requested information is not available centrally.

Mentally Handicapped People

42. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about his plans to improve social service provision for the mentally handicapped.

Mr. John Patten: Joint planning and collaboration between the statutory authorities is crucial for the improvement of mental handicap services. The overall aims are to develop co-ordinated health and social services in each locality, and to achieve a major shift from institutional care for mentally handicapped people to a range of community care.

We scrutinise health authorities' plans as to the extent to which local authorities have been involved in planning services and are involved in operations. District health authorities have been enabled to make continuing annual payments for as long as necessary to local authorities and voluntary organisations for people out of hospital moving into community care. Joint finance allocations, which will amount to about £100 million this year, are available to pump-prime social services and housing and education for mentally handicapped people among other vulnerable groups, and we shall spend £16 million up to March 1988 on our care in the community pilot projects, including some £7 million on 11 projects for mentally handicapped people.

The Department's plans for improving services include continuation of an extensive programme of research; the administration and assessment of projects approved under the children's initiative for getting mentally handicapped children out of hospital; grants to voluntary organisations; and encouragement of the development of joint in-service training of staff.

The national development team for mentally handicapped people will continue to advise health and local authorities, on request, on the implementation of mental handicap policies and its reports of visits after 1984 will be published.

Careful consideration is being given to the detailed recommendations of the recent report of the Social Services Committee* and we welcome its wholehearted endorsement of a policy of community care for mentally disordered people.

[* 2nd Report of the House of Commons Social Services Committee on Community Care with Special Reference to Adult Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People. 28 February 1985.]

State Earnings-Related Pension

43. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest forecast for the cost of the state earnings-related pension scheme in 1990 and 2000.

Mr. Whitney: The latest estimate is that made by the Government Actuary in his 1982 quinquennial review. On the assumption that earnings and earnings limits increased at 8 per cent. a year from 1985-86 and that earnings-related pensions increased at 6 per cent. a year from the date of award, the cost of earnings-related additional component for retirement pensioners would be £479 million in 1990-91 and £1,787 million in 2000-01 at 1981-82 earnings levels.

Pensioners (Canada)

47. Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made on a reciprocal agreement with Canada to enable United Kingdom pensioners living there to benefit from uprating.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 28 February, at column 267, to my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn).

Rehabilitation Centres

49. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the criteria governing his decision to close rehabilitation centres.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 5 February at column 548.

NHS Administration (Savings)

50. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what annual revenue savings have been made as a result of the recent removal of one tier of National Health Service administration.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have information in the precise form requested. But the management cost data we collect indicate that our policies reduced the cost of managing the National Health Service by some £64 million in 1982-83 and by some £85 million in 1983-84. A large part of this reduction can be attributed to the restructuring of the National Health Service in April 1982.

Retirement Pensioners

51. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many retirement pensioners in receipt of a pension were over 85 years of age at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: The latest available figures are for September 1983. At that time there were 641,000 retirement pensioners — including 26,000 non-contributory pensioners — aged 85 and over in Great Britain. These figures do not include pensioners wholly dependent on supplementary benefit.

Prescriptions

52. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will bring in measures to limit the quantity of drugs prescribed on each doctor's prescription.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We already advise doctors to prescribe drugs in adequate but not excessive quantities. There could be disadvantages in specifying a maximum quantity of drugs prescribable on each FP10 prescription form, since the quantity needed depends on the form of a patient's treatment. For example, patients on long-term therapy have very different requirements from those suffering from acute, short-term, conditions. However, this is a point we are very willing to discuss with the medical profession.

Ambulance Service (Newcastle upon Tyne)

53. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the hospital administration in the city of Newcastle upon Tyne regarding the reorganisation of the ambulance service.

Mr. John Patten: We have had no direct discussions with the Newcastle health authority. The Northern regional health authority consulted widely on its proposals and received comments from the Newcastle health authority and the Newcastle community health council. These comments were fully considered by the Regional health authority.

Hypothermia

54. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died from hypothermia in 1984 and 1985 to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The provisional number of deaths registered between 1 January and 30 November 1984 with mention of hypothermia on the death certificate is 502. Information from death registrations is usually available some three to four months after the event.

Claimants (Information)

55. Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures his Department takes to ensure that information on claimants is treated confidentially.

Mr. Whitney: Staff are provided with instructions about disclosure of information and are reminded regularly of their obligations under the Official Secrets Act not to disclose official information to unauthorised persons.

Claims (Processing)

56. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the staffing at local offices of his Department in order to speed up the processing of clients' claims.

Mr. Whitney: The departmental local office complementing system — a guide to which is in the Library — provides for the determination of local office complements. The number of staff needed to do the work required is calculated and allocated on the basis of comprehensive and detailed statistical analyses and forecasts of the work load. One of the elements of the system is a quarterly review of staffing levels, designed to maintain the match between the number of staff and the work load.

Personal Social Services

57. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the effect of rate capping and penalties on personal social services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Only 10 high spending local authorities with responsibilities for personal social services have been designated for rates limitation in 1985-86. These authorities are all spending relatively more than other authorities providing a good standard of service, and they have scope for making the economies required of them without putting essential services at risk.

Abatement of block grant is applied only when authorities exceed the expenditure guidance set them. Many authorities have shown that it is possible to meet, or come very close to, that expenditure guidance while maintaining essential social services.

The controls are on total spending by each authority, and the authorities themselves will continue to decide relative priorities between their various services.

60. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has estimated the increase in demand for personal social services caused by increasing unemployment.

Mr. John Patten: It is for individual local authorities to make their own assessments of the demands for personal social services and to determine their priorities accordingly.

Rehabilitation (Psychiatric Patients)

58. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that adequate arrangements exist for handling the problems of neighbours during the rehabilitation of ex-patients of psychiatric institutions.

Mr. John Patten: The great majority of people discharged from mental illness hospitals return to their former homes and present no particular problems for their neighbours. The comparatively few who are discharged to a new life, and who may still be undergoing rehabilitation, need all the help and understanding they can get. If discharge is properly planned and carried out, problems with neighbours need not arise.

Where problems do arise we expect them to be settled as between citizens of equal rights. But our experience is that actual problems, as distinct from forebodings, are infrequent, and it should be remembered that people who have been in mental illness hospitals have a right to confidentiality.

Housing Benefit

59. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the domestic ratepayers receive housing benefit in the metropolitan areas of (a) Liverpool, (b) Sheffield, (c) Stockport and (d) Solihull.

Mr. Whitney: We estimate from authorities' subsidy returns that the proportion of domestic ratepayers currently receiving housing benefit in the areas requested is as follows:

(a) 50 per cent.
(b) 42 per cent.
(c) 28 per cent.
(d) 36 per cent.

Unemployment Benefits

62. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide his estimate of the total expenditure incurred by his Department in providing income and allowances for those under the age of 65 years who are dependent on state benefit because of unemployment.

Mr. Whitney: The total cost of unemployment benefit, supplementary benefit, rent rebates and allowances and rate rebates paid because the recipient was unemployed is estimated as £6·2 billion in 1984-85.

Donor Cards

64. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what increase there has been in the number of donor cards held by the public since the publicity campaign on organ transplantation launched in February 1984.

Mr. John Patten: During 1983 just under 2 million organ donor cards were issued by the Department's leaflets unit at Stanmore. During 1984 the number rose to 12·5 million, most of them issued after the launch of our campaign to increase public awareness of the benefits of transplantation and to promote the organ donor card scheme. It is impossible to estimate precisely how many of these cards have been signed and are now being carried by people willing to donate their organs.

Death Grant

65. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, before he completes his review of the present death grant, he will cause a survey to be made of cost of funerals in various parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will publish his findings in the Official Report.

Mr. Whitney: No. The cost of a funeral varies widely for several reasons including the wishes of those responsible for the funeral. I understand that the National Association of Funeral Directors puts the cost of an average funeral, without a headstone, at £350 to £650.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement about health service workers' pay.

Mr. John Patten: Pay negotiations for staff groups not covered by review body recommendations are conducted in the National Health Service Whitley Councils. I understand that claims have recently been submitted on behalf of some of these groups, and are under consideration. Other claims are expected.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service prescriptions were written in 1983 for preparations ranging from tablets to formula A10 to tablets to formula B100 as listed on pages 25 to 28 of his proposed list of drugs and other substances not to be available at the expense of the National Health Service from 1 April 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our one in 200 sample records no prescriptions for these preparations in 1983. However, they are all prescribable products falling within the therapeutic categories covered by the selected list. They have been included in the list of products not to be available at National Health Service expense from 1 April so that savings are not eroded by prescriptions for these products as replacements for others to be removed from NHS supply.

Surgical Wards (Manchester)

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why surgical wards are closed at weekends in the north, central and south area health authorities of Manchester; and what is the impact on patients requiring treatment.

Mr. John Patten: Health authorities are responsible for the provision and management of health services locally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairmen of the three district health authorities concerned for the information he seeks.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the powers of his Department to monitor and enforce the payment of statutory sick pay.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Department's inspectors monitor payment of statutory sick pay by visiting employers and inspecting the relevant records. Authority for such inspections is contained in section 19 of the Social Security and Housing Benefits Act 1982. The powers relating to the failure to pay statutory sick pay are contained in regulations 9 and 22 of the Statutory Sick Pay (General) Regulations 1982 and section 16 of the Social Security and Housing Benefits Act 1982.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken recently to ensure that payments of statutory sick pay are paid by employers.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's inspectors visit employers to establish that the statutory sick pay scheme is being operated correctly. Following introduction of the new scheme, in April 1983, the aim was to visit as many employers as possible to help with any initial difficulties. More recently the Department has concentrated on visiting employers who have requested help and those whom there is reason to believe are likely to have made mistakes in operating the scheme. Starting this month visits will also be made to a proportion of employers selected randomly.

Factor VIII

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for product licences in respect of imported heat-treated factor VIII have been received by his Department; and how many were granted in 1984 and in 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Further to my reply on 20 February at columns 498-500, to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), all the seven applications made since November 1984 for product licences under the Medicines Act for heat-treated factor VIII were granted earlier this year. All of these were for imported products.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if exactly similar tests are applied to imported factor VIII products as to Blood Products Laboratory products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Central Blood Laboratories Authority, which is a special health authority, ensures the safety and quality of products made at its blood products laboratory. Imported, commercially manufactured factor VIII is subject to the formal licensing arrangements under the Medicines Act 1968.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's studies of the economics of self-sufficiency against the continued importation of factor VIII products.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 19 February at columns 446-47.

Haemophilia Society

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the possibility of additional core funding for the Haemophilia Society.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor) on 7 March.

AIDS

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken to ensure adequate staffing at haemophilia treatment centres during the acquired immune deficiency syndrome crisis both in terms of treatment and counselling.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 19 February at column 446.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he intends to allocate to scientists presently working on devising tests to screen blood for the purpose of detecting acquired immune deficiency syndrome symptoms.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are giving financial support to scientists working on the development of a British screening test. We are also providing funds for the evaluation of screening tests, as they become available, to assess which will be most suitable for the National Health Service.

Hospital Kitchens (Hygiene)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assistance he intends to give to district and regional health authorities to enable them to upgrade hygiene standards in kitchens in National Health Service hospitals;

(2) what guidelines he intends to issue to staff of the National Health Service hospitals about the storage and preservation of fresh frozen foods in kitchens with a view to preventing further outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning.

Mr. John Patten: We have no reason to believe that the general standards of hygiene and food preparation in National Health Service hospitals are unsatisfactory. The Department has issued comprehensive guidance on the storage and preservation of fresh and frozen foods. We shall consider whether further action is required when the report of the inquiry into the outbreak of food poisoning at the Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield, is received.

Benefits

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the increase in real terms in expenditure on social security benefits between 1978-79 and 1983-84 is the result of (a) increases in the number of recipients, (b) increases in the value of the benefits and (c) the introduction of new benefits.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 22 October 1984, at column 512, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short.)

Kidney and Liver Transplants

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an assessment of the latest convenient figures of the shortage of facilities for patients waiting for kidney and liver transplants.

Mr. John Patten: The only information available centrally on need for kidney and liver transplants is the number of patients registered with the United Kingdom transplant service. On 18 February, 2,626 patients were registered as waiting for kidney transplants and nine for liver transplants. The factor that has been limiting the expansion of kidney transplantation has only been the availability of donor kidneys, although that has increased significantly since our donor card campaign began in February 1984. In the nine months immediately following the campaign, 35 per cent. more kidneys were transplanted than in the same period in 1983.

Liver transplantation is a more recently established service and its designation as a supra regional service was announced in January. In 1985-86 £2·3 million will be set aside for this service, £884,000 of it additional central funds to enable the level of provision to be expanded. Forty-nine liver transplants were performed in 1984 and we expect the 1985 total to show a significant increase.

Disabled and Elderly Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to which local authorities have established central control warden call and alarm systems for disabled and elderly people.

Mr. Newton: Alarm systems for elderly and disabled people may be provided by local social services or housing departments or privately. Information is not held centrally about their installation.

Non-ambulance Transport Services

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish his Department's assessment of the plans submitted by regional health authorities concerning non-ambulance transport services.

Mr. John Patten: The plans submitted by the regional health authorities are very detailed documents and it will take some time to carry out the assessment and decide on any further action which may be required.

Head Injuries

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him on (a) the number of people who receive hospital treatment for head injuries each year, (b) the number of people who need rehabilitation after head injuries each year and (c) the number of people who receive rehabilitation after head injuries each year.

Mr. John Patten: The estimated number of inpatients treated in National Health Service hospitals in England in 1982 for skull fractures and intracranial injuries was 128,230. Information is not available about how many of these patients needed or received rehabilitation after treatment during the acute phase.

Supplementary Benefit (Board and Lodging)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total weekly amount paid in board and lodgings allowances in the city of Portsmouth, during the month of January;

(2) how many people received board and lodgings allowances in the city of Portsmouth during January.

Mr. Whitney: Separate figures are not available for Portsmouth and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to extend the temporary regulations on payment for board and lodging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We do not intend to extend the temporary regulations. We shall be laying further regulations shortly.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance has been given to local Department of Health and Social Security's offices in Scotland on the payment of severe disablement allowance in relation to those registered as blind or partially sighted; and what representations he has had on this matter.

Mr. Newton: The guidance to our local offices in Scotland reflects the position that a claim for severe disablement allowance from a visually handicapped person who first became incapable of work after his 20th birthday, and who is not in receipt of a passport benefit, should be referred to the adjudicating medical authorities to determine the disablement question. Registration as a blind or partially sighted person with a local authority in Scotland is on a non-statutory basis and, unlike in England and Wales therefore, a person so registered cannot automatically be accepted as satisfying the 80 per cent. disablement condition. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security has recently replied to a letter on this matter from the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Mr. Johnston) on behalf of the Northern Counties Institute for the Blind.

NHS Vehicle Scheme

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will allow drivers to buy cars which they have under the National Health Service vehicle scheme; what is the future of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Entry to the National Health Service vehicle scheme ceased with the introduction of the mobility allowance on 1 January 1976, and the number of drivers in the scheme has declined steadily. Some 1,000 still retain cars, but only about 650 are eligible to have them replaced when they wear out. All have the right to switch to the mobility allowance, without a medical examination or age conditions, as an alternative to a car. Where a car is given up by two people to whom it was issued on a shared basis, each is entitled to receive a mobility allowance.

The Department will shortly be inviting organisations representing disabled drivers to discuss proposals for arrangements, parallel to those already applying to the war pensioners' vehicle scheme, to enable drivers who choose to switch to the mobility allowance to buy their cars on favourable terms. It is envisaged that as part of these arrangements a date should be set after which drivers whose cars wear out will switch automatically to the mobility allowance.

The proposal will not affect drivers of departmental three-wheelers, but we shall welcome the organisations' views on whether such drivers should also be given the opportunity to buy cars released from the war pensioners' and National Health Service vehicle schemes.

Supplementary Pensions

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners would cease to be entitled to supplementary pensions if (a) additional requirements for heating and (b) other additional requirements were abolished.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984; c. 386]: Provisional estimates indicate that if heating additions were abolished and no other compensating changes were made, about 300,000 supplementary pensioners would cease to be entitled to supplementary benefit. If other additional requirements were abolished and no other changes were made, somewhat under 50,000 would cease to be entitled to supplementary benefit.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies Her Majesty's Government have made, or are aware of, as to the extent of ingestion of fluoride by the population as a result of eating food such as vegetables grown on land irrigated with fluoride-containing water or processed in water containing fluoride; what conclusions have been drawn;; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 26 Februray, c. 140]: There is a great deal of research which indicates that there is no significant increase in the uptake of fluoride by vegetables grown on land irrigated with fluoridated water. The studies are reviewed by Davison in "Proceedings of the International Fluoride Symposium", Utah 1982.

Studies of the fluoride content of processed foods and beverages prepared with water containing fluoride at a concentration of 1 mg/litre indicate that such products may contain up to 0·5mg/kg more fluoride than those prepared with water containing almost no fluoride—Marier and Rose, "Journal of Food Science," 31, 941-946; Auermann, Fluoride, 6 78-83; Bocker and Bruce Var Föda 33 198-261. This would be true whether this concentration of fluoride in the water was natually occurring or brought about by artificial addition of fluoride. In a study undertaken by the food science division of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, carbonated beverages made with non-fluoridated water had a mean fluoride concentration of 0·12 mg/kg, while carbonated beverages made with fluoridated water had a mean fluoride concentration of 0·41 mg/kg, a difference of 0·29 mg/kg —Sherlock, J. Roy—Society Health 1 34-36 (1984). Since processed foods and beverages are not the major part of the diet, the increase in ingestion of fluoride as a consequence of the use of fluoridated water in processing is small.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make fluoride tablets available on prescription to those persons who are medically advised that they should take fluoride as a prophylactic, in areas where fluoride is not present in the water supplies at a level of one milligram per litre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 March, c. 419-20]: No. Studies have shown that it is in practice difficult for many parents to maintain the necessary daily regime of administration of fluoride tablets over the many years of tooth formation. We therefore do not consider that it would be cost effective to provide this particular form of supplementation for prophylaxis.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turks and Caicos Islands

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking following the arrest of the Prime Minister of the Turks and Caicos Islands and other members of the Administration in Miami on drugs charges; whether the Government had any warning that this was to happen; and if he will make a statement on the implications of this incident for the protection of British citizens of a British colony provided by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Renton: We have been in close touch with the Governor about the arrest of Mr. Saunders, the Chief Minister of the Turks and Caicos Islands, Mr. Missick, one of his Ministers, and Mr. Smith, an elected member of the islands' Legislative Council. Court proceedings could take some time and no doubt Mr. Saunders will be reconsidering his position as Chief Minister in view of the need for good government of the territory. The Governor is in close touch with other leading politicians in the territory about this.

The United States Drug Enforcement Administration authorities have been working in close co-operation with the Turks and Caicos Islands police force, which is responsible directly to the Governor, on the prevention of the illegal importation of narcotics into the United States mainland through the islands from South America. The decision to make the arrests was taken by the United States authorities and we were kept informed throughout.

Narcotics are a recognised area for international co-operation. This exists between officials responsible for policy on drug matters both in the context of the United Nations (United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse and Control), the multilateral Single Narcotics Convention (Cmnd. 7466) and generally. Also there is close co-operation on operational matters between law enforcement officers on a day-to-day basis; this is not confined to the United States.

Mr. Saunders and his colleagues are British Dependent Territories citizens and therefore are entitled to United Kingdom consular protection. A consular official attended the initial court hearings and has visited the detainees.

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the Government of the Turks and Caicos Islands on the arrest of the Prime Minister and other members of the Administration in Miami on drugs charges.

Mr. Renton: The Government of the Turks and Caicos Islands are continuing under the Governor and the acting Chief Minister, Mr. Francis. There is no reason why this unfortunate episode should have any lasting effect on the good government of the islands.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what form of military and technical aid has been given during the last 12 months to the Government of Sri Lanka; what discussions have taken place with the Government of Sri Lanka on the question of military assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The military and related assistance we provide to Sri Lanka is confined to the provision of training in the United Kingdom for individual members of the Sri Lankan armed services and police on the same basis as for other Commonwealth and friendly countries. Details were given in my answers to the hon. Member on 7 February at columns 659-60, and those given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 14 February at column 286. It is not the practice to reveal the contents of confidential discussions with other Governments. The Sri Lankan Government are well aware that we have no intention of becoming involved in their internal affairs.

El Salvador

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria will be used in the selection of El Salvadorean army officers for training in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 11 March.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there have been further developments since the drafts of the new constitution for the Falkland Islands and the Falkland Islands Dependencies were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 24 January.

Mr. Renton: When they approved the draft constitutions on 15-16 January the Falkland Islands Councillors made a number of comments on the texts. These have been the subject of further consultation. Revised drafts, reflecting the outcome of that consultation, were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 11 March. The most significant amendments reflect the Government's decision, taken in the light of strong views expressed by the Councillors, to revert to the normal title of "Governor" of the Falkland Islands, in place of "Civil Commissioner."

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many Pershing II and cruise missiles have been deployed in Western Europe since the cessation of the intermediate nuclear forces talks in Geneva, giving the number in each country;

(2) if he will give the current balance of intermediate nuclear forces in Europe.

Mr. Stanley: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to figure 11 "The Balance of Nuclear Forces" on page 43 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984 (Cmnd. 9227, Vol I). I also refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 27 November 1984 at column 416. This data will be revised in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reductions in tactical nuclear weapons in Europe have been made by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Stanley: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to page 6, paragraph 123 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984 — (Cmnd. 9227, Vol. I).

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will estimate how many Soviet SS20 missiles are targeted against western European countries, giving the number targeted against each country;

(2) if he will estimate the current number of Soviet SS20 missiles deployed in eastern Europe and the rate of deployment since the cessation of the intermediate nuclear forces talks in Geneva.

Mr. Stanley: I have been asked to reply.

I cannot at present add to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 13 November 1984 at columns 523-24.

The number of SS20 missile warheads facing west in November 1983 when the Soviet Union withdrew from the INF negotiations was 729. Since then the Soviet Union has started more than 10 new SS20 bases, facing both east and west. This is the largest number of SS20 bases begun in any one year since this missile was first deployed in 1977.

It is not possible to say how many SS20s are targeted against each individual Western European country, and in any case the targeting could be altered rapidly. The SS20s range enables it to cover targets throughout the European NATO area from bases inside the Soviet Union. There are no SS20s deployed outside the Soviet Union.

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Service what arangements are in hand to ensure that the Management and Personnel Office complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and opportunities for part-time working. Women are being encouraged to attend courses —particularly developmental courses—and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available, including the Civil Service college course in middle management for women only.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal how many people are authorised to use the photo-copying machine in Upper Committee Corridor North; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: As the notice posted adjacent to the photo-copying machine states, the machine can be used only by hon. Members or by secretaries or research assistants acting on Members' behalf with their specific authorisation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Horse Breeding and Racing

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken in connecton with the development of horse breeding and racing in Northern Ireland since the publication in May 1984 of the Department of Agriculture's consultation paper on the subject.

Dr. Boyson: Decisions on the options outlined in the consultation paper have been deferred pending completion of an economic study to provide more comprehensive data on the value of the equine industry. This study, which is being carried out by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in conjunction with the Queen's University of Belfast, is partly financed by the industry and by the Industrial Development Board; it is expected to take at least a year to complete.

Rape

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidences of rape were reported to the Royal Ulster Constabulary in each of the last five years; how many of these resulted in prosecution; and what was the outcome of these prosecutions.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Incidents of rape reported	48	48	58	52	75
Persons proceeded against (for rape)	13	10	12	14	16
Persons found guilty	12	8	9	13	14

Note: The figures in relation to the persons proceeded against and those found guilty do not relate directly to the reported incidents in each year. Such a correlation could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Transport Costs

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will investigate with leaders of business, commerce and the transport industry ways in which they may be able to overcome the high costs of transporting goods to and from Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Tourism

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures the Government are preparing to help the tourist industry in Northern Ireland, following the publication of the discussion paper on tourism prepared by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Department of Economic Development.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Manufacturing Companies (Railway Sidings)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to introduce a scheme akin to British Rail's Speedlink system, whereby manufacturing companies are encouraged to build a railway siding adjacent to their premises in conjunction with Northern Ireland railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give a breakdown of (a) the current complement of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as of 3 March 1985, in terms of stated religion and at the same date in 1984 and (b) the stated religion of Royal Ulster Constabulary casualties caused by direct terrorist attacks on individual Royal Ulster Constabulary personnel, during the period 4 March 1984 to 3 March 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 7 March 1985]: Figures are not available for 3 March 1984 and 3 March 1985, but the complement of the regular Royal Ulster Constabulary on 28 February 1984 was 8,000 and was 8,142 on 28 February 1985. I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 14 December 1984 at column 610, about the religious affiliations of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

During the year ended 3 March 1985, terrorists killed 17 members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve. Four of those killed are understood to have been Roman Catholics. The circumstances in which three of these four policemen were murdered were such that it is unlikely that the terrorists would have been aware of their religious persuasion.

NATIONAL FINANCE

PAYE

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will identify the period of time during which Inland Revenue staff should undertake and complete annual assessing reviews of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers; and if he will estimate the proportion of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers to whom a repayment of tax is found to be due in the course of such work.

Mr. Moore: Inland Revenue staff begin an annual assessing review of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers as soon after 5 April as information regarding pay and tax becomes available from employers. The aim is to complete the review as soon as practicable and the bulk of the work is usually completed over the following few months. No records are maintained of repayments of tax arising specifically out of the review, but based on the latest available figures it is estimated that the proportion of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers to whom a repayment of tax is found to be due would not exceed one in twenty.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Inland Revenue instructions provide for the records of all pay-as-you-earn taxpayers to be reviewed annually for assessment or non-assessment; and what categories of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers are excluded from this process.

Mr. Moore: Inland Revenue instructions provide for the records of all pay-as-you-earn taxpayers who were in employment at 5 April or in receipt of unemployment benefit or occupational pension at that date to be reviewed annually for assessment or non-assessment.

Taxpayers who ceased employment during the tax year without subsequently receiving either unemployment benefit or an occupational pension are normally excluded from this review: separate in-year procedures exist for the handling of final cessations of employment.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers for whom the last tax year will not have been assessed or otherwise cleared by Inland Revenue staff by 5 April; and if he will list, by Inland Revenue region, the number of pay-as-you-earn taxpayers not so assessed or cleared after 12 months in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moore: The Inland Revenue estimates that the number of pay-as-you-earn cases* which will not have been assessed or otherwise cleared for the year ended 5 April 1984 by 12 April 1985—when national figures are next collated—will be approximately 2·9 million (10 per cent. of the total).

The following table shows the comparative figures, by Inland Revenue region, for the three previous years:

Uncleared Cases at April

Guardianship Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to the reply of 10 January, Official Report, column 528, concerning departmental expenditure on boarding school allowances, whether he will provide similar information on guardianship allowances for children who remain at day schools in the United Kingdom together with the amount of that allowance compared with the boarding school allowance.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of children for whom a guardian allowance is payable and the costs of such payments to public funds in 1983-84 are as follows. Estimates have been made where precise details are not readily available.

	Number of Children	Cost (£ pa)
Armed Forces	222	83,000
Diplomatic Service	8	1,760
British Council	Nil	Nil
Overseas Development Administration	3	1,100
Ministry of Defence (Civilians)	11	4,070
Other Departments	10	3,680
Total	254	93,610

In addition, there were guardian allowance payments totalling £7,700 from the overseas aid programme for 21 children of British supplemented staff employed by overseas Governments and organisations.

The amounts of the guardian allowance and boarding school allowance and the circumstances in which they are paid may be found in the following documents which are available in the Library of the House. For members of the armed forces, the basic relevent information is set out in paragraph 2796 to 2799 of "Queen's Regulations for the Royal Air Force." For Home civil servants, the details are in paragraphs 7701 to 7734 of the Civil Service Pay and conditions of Service Code." For members of the Diplomatic Service, comparable payments are made under sections 31 and 35 of "Diplomatic Service Regulations" The Diplomatic Service boarding school allowance maxima are:

	Boys	Girls
Senior school	£4,266 pa	£4,096 pa
Junior school	£3,840 pa	£3,686 pa

The Diplomatic Service child elsewhere allowance—equivalent to guardian allowance—is £75 per annum for the first and £370 per annum for subsequent children.

Boarding School Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to the reply of 10 January, Official Report, column 528, concerning costs incurred by departments on boarding school allowances, whether he will give the number of children concerned in each case and any additional costs such as transportation home for school holidays.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information related to 1983-84 is as follows:

	Number of Children	Additional Costs £M (estimates)
Armed Forces	* 21,500	*
Diplomatic Service	1,375	1·2
British Council	238	0·2
Overseas Development Administration	315	0·6
Ministry of Defence (Civilians)	133	*
Other Departments	70	*

* In the case of armed forces personnel, Ministry of Defence civilians and the staff of some other Departments, seats are made available wherever possible on service flights for children to join their parents for school holidays. The cost of this facility is not separately identifiable.

The number of children of British supplemented staff employed by overseas Governments and organisations for whom boarding school allowances were paid from the overseas aid programme in 1983-84 was 750 and the additional costs were about £1·4 million.

Vermouth

Mr. Murphy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the consequences of the House of Lords judgment regarding taxation on vermouth.

Mr. Hayhoe: The House of Lords has not yet delivered its judgment in the case between Cinzano (UK) Limited and the Commissioners of Customs and Excise.

Indirect Taxes

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in real terms since 1978-79 in the amount of indirect taxation paid by individuals.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to table 2 of "The Next Ten Years: Public Expenditure and Taxation in the 1990s," Cmnd. 9189, published by HMSO in March 1984.

Customs Services (Belfast)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that customs services at Belfast harbour are adequately staffed and that the processing of container traffic is completed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Customs staffing at Belfast harbour is reviewed regularly to ensure that it is adequate to facilitate traffic while having due regard to the economic use of resources.

Nationalised Industries (Legislation)

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 11 February, Official Report, column 62, if he will place in the Library copies of comments received on his consultation paper on nationalised industries legislation.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is done under the financial management initiative to ensure that line managers are fully informed of all the capital assets under their management; and what is the system of reporting on the condition of these assets.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1985]: One of the key objectives of the financial management initiative is to give line managers better information about the costs of all of their resources, including the costs of capital assets, and how they are used. Departments are developing their management accounts and information systems to this end. These arrangements, and those for monitoring the condition of assets, may take various forms depending on the Department's functions and the nature of its assets.

Hot Take-away Food (VAT)

Mr. Waller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the tax revenue obtained from value added tax on hot take-away food.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 12 November to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) at column 89.

Pool Betting Duty

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Football League for a reduction in pool betting duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The president of the Football League has written to urge a reduction in pool betting duty. This representation will be carefully considered.

DEFENCE

Dockyard Training Centres

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence what security there is for new apprentices being taken on at the Rosyth and Devonport dockyard training centres that they will be able to complete their skills training.

Mr. Lee: Their security lies in the fact that past generations of MOD apprentices have all, subject to satisfactory individual performance, received a full course of training. New apprentices at Rosyth and Devonport dockyards will be similarly treated.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the quantities and types of skills training conducted by the training centres in the Devonport and Rosyth dockyards in the past five years.

Mr. Lee: In Devonport and Rosyth dockyards in the period 1979-80 to 1983-84 some 630,274 trainee days of apprentice training were given: 32,941 trainee days of vocational training; 17,695 trainee days of management training; and 3,283 trainee days of induction training. The skills covered by apprentice and vocational training were mainly electrical, mechanical and shipwright, with a lesser amount of training for other trades such as coppersmith, boilermaker, founder, plumber, joiner, sailmaker, pattern maker, blacksmith and welder.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents, classified by severity and cost, there have been involving his Department's vehicles in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: Information on accidents is as follows. There is no system for clarifying severity as such.

Year	*Total No. of Road Traffic Accidents	RTA Rate†	Vehicle Repair cost‡ £M	Casualties
				Killed	Injured
1979-80	11,157	7·2	2·73	14	864
1980-81	10,475	7·4	2·945	21	850
1981-82	10,050	6·7	2·745	22	896
1982-83	10,524	6·4	3·425	20	885
1983-84	10,092	7·0	3·084	19	1,034

* Figures cover the RN/RM, Army, RAF but not the PE for which no centralised statistics were kept prior to the current financial year.
† Road Traffic Accident rate = number of accidents per 100,000 vehicle miles.
‡ Vehicle Repair Cost for Service vehicles only. It would be impossible to attribute third party or employee disability costs to individual accidents without dispoportionate effort.

Service Drivers

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of vehicle of heavy goods vehicle classification used by the armed forces and the number of qualified drivers needed each year both for these types of vehicle and for other purposes.

Mr. Lee: There are well in excess of 1,000 types of vehicles of heavy goods vehicle classification used by the armed forces. The number of qualified service drivers needed each year for these types and for other purposes is 16,874. There are in addition a number of other drivers trained in individual units for which no central records are kept.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision on the future of driver training for the armed services.

Mr. Lee: We are currently engaged in a major review of driver training. It is too early to say when we will be in a position to make any decisions.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the minimum qualifications and experience necessary for driving instructors instructing heavy goods vehicle trainees in the armed services.

Mr. Lee: The armed services comply with the civilian law for driving instructors in that they must hold the appropriate licence. In addition, driving instructors usually have at least two years' experience in driving heavy goods vehicles and have passed an instructors' course or are deemed to be competent to instruct by their commanding officer.

Devonport and Rosyth Dockyards

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision on the Devonport and Rosyth dockyards.

Mr. Lee: We wish to complete our present deliberations as soon as possible. There will be a period of consultation before a decision is taken on future arrangements for the royal dockyards.

Written Answers to Questions

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy Marriages

Mr. Cormack asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what evidence the Church Commissioners have submitted to the House of Bishops' working party on the breakdown of clergy marriages.

Sir William van Straubenzee: Representatives of the commissioners have attended all the meetings of the working party and have offered information and advice as and when requested.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 11 to 12 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My hon. Friend the Minister of State and I represented the United Kingdom.

There was a first exchange of views on the Commission's price proposals.

I emphasised the need for realism, restraint and effective administration and indicated that I would support the Commission in continuing to put the common agriculture policy on a sounder and more realistic footing.

I stressed the importance of consolidating the decisions taken by the Council last year, particularly in relation to milk quotas where the Council needs to ensure that those decisions are effectively implemented throughout the Community.

I also stressed that the guarantee thresholds which have been agreed for cereals and rape seed and other products should be implemented fully and pointed to the need to exercise restraint on Mediterranean products where costs of disposal are mounting rapidly.

While supporting the Commission's proposals on a price freeze for beef, I pointed out that it was certainly not the time to abolish the beef variable premium as its abolition would lead to extra costs to the Community budget.

I made clear my opposition to any measures on sheepmeat that might discriminate against the United Kingdom, but indicated willingness to discuss constructively changes in certain aspects of the regime.

I am glad to say that after a long period of negotiation and discussion decisions were reached on a package of measures under the guidance section of the agricultural fund.

The new Community system of investment aids will be simpler to administer, focus on the smaller farmer and take account of the market situation. Member states will be able to operate national systems of aid for farmers not eligible for improvement plans, but at lower rates of grant.

I am pleased that the support for less favoured areas, which is so important to our upland farmers, will remain essentially unchanged. In particular, there will be no limit per farm on the number of livestock qualifying for headage payments. In order to encourage diversification of farming businesses, increased levels of assistance will be available for investments for tourism and crafts purposes and we intend to make use of them. The regulations will also include a new provision for assisting the planting and improvement of farm woodlands. For young farmers, national Governments will be able to aid installation costs and also pay grant on improvement plans at 25 per cent. above the normal rate.

I was particularly gratified that the Council was able to agree a text on the basis of which member states would be permitted to introduce schemes to encourage, in environmentally sensitive areas, farming methods and practices which were beneficial to conservation.

This is an imaginative development which I have been urging on my colleagues for some time. At our request the Commission agreed to bring forward proposals before the end of this year for similar measures on a Community basis.

Assistance for marketing and processing projects has been renewed for a further five-year period. The Council also agreed that the Commission should bring forward urgently proposals for continuing aid for feedmills in Northern Ireland.

The Council agreed that all these measures could be accommodated with the total figure of 5·25 becu suggested by the ECOFIN Council. This represents a significant reduction on the Commission's original estimate of 8·3 becu, thus securing one of our major objectives in the negotiations. I made it clear that our agreement to this package was without prejudice to decisions that have yet to be taken on integrated Mediterranean programmes.

Finally, we raised again the problem of low price imports of semi-processed soft fruit from the Eastern bloc. The Commission agreed to pursue the question with the countries concerned.

Spain

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Spain is in surplus or deficit production in milk, beef, sheepmeat and grain.

Mr. MacGregor: Information available for recent years indicates that Spain has been a net importer of some of the main dairy products but broadly self sufficient in others. Production of beef and, to a greater degree, grains has fallen short of domestic requirements. Production and consumption of sheepmeat as been broadly in balance.

Portugal

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Portugal is in surplus or deficit in milk, beef, sheepmeat and grain.

Mr. MacGregor: Information available for recent years indicates that Portugal as been a net importer of the main milk products. There have been small net imports of beef but consumption and production of sheepmeat has been broadly in balance. There has been a substantial shortfall of grain production in relation to consumption.

Warble Fly

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of cattle infested with warble fly were notified to his Department in each year since the beginning of the warble fly eradication campaign.

Mrs. Fenner: Surveys show that infestation in cattle has dropped from over 30 per cent. in 1978, at the start of the campaign, to 0·01 per cent. in 1984. In 1982, when warble fly became notifiable, owners of 623 herds where disease was suspected were served notices to treat their cattle; in 1983 the figure was 518 and in 1984, 500.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the contribution to agricultural production of each of the four categories of holding, by size of business, given in table 4 of the annual review White Paper, Cmnd. 9423.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures are available for England and Wales only, as set out below:

Percentage Contribution to Total Output
(Size of business based on standard man-day (smd) values)

	per cent.
On holdings under 250 smd	8·0
On holdings 250—499 smd	13·0
On holdings 500—999 smd	24·5
On holdings 1,000 smd and over	54·6
All holdings	*100

* allowing for rounding.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning multiple holdings in agriculture; and if he will publish in the Official Report any information available on (i) multiple holdings in medium and large farms, (ii) the number of corporate enterprises, (iii) the number of holdings owned by corporate enterprises and (iv) the proportion of output represented by corporate enterprises.

Mr. MacGregor: This information is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage of the total area of crops and grass accounted for by holdings with 100 hectares or more of crops and grass in 1984, 1972, 1976 and 1960.

Mr. MacGregor: Information is not available for all the years quoted on holdings with 100 hectares or more of crops and grass for the United Kingdom. Figures are available, however, for holdings with 300 acres (about 120 hectares) or more of crops and grass in England and Wales. This is given in the table below, which shows the percentage of the total crops and grass accounted for by holdings of 300 acres or more of crops and grass.

Sugar Beet

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average sugar content of sugar beet in the United Kingdom in each of the years 1980 to 1984; and what was the corresponding European Economic Community figure.

Mr. MacGregor: The average sugar content of sugar beet in the United Kingdom for the years requested is as follows. The corresponding figures for the European Community are not available.

Year	Average Sugar Content per cent.
1980-81	16·96

European Community (Exports)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report figures for exports of surplus European Economic Community commodities to third countries in 1983 and to the latest possible date in 1984 on the same basis as in the answer of 20 December 1983, Official Report, columns 162-64.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is provided in the following tables:

Hill Farmers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his reply of 19 December, Official Report, column 200, concerning support to hill farmers, and so on whether the figure of 70 per cent. includes the cost of deficiency payments on sheepmeat; and what is the percentage contribution of these payments in both cases.

Mr. MacGregor: Variable premium payments are generally consolidated within the price received by farmers for fat lambs sold on a deadweight basis but for lambs sold on a liveweight basis through auctions variable premiums are paid direct to the farmers. For the farm management survey in England direct receipts of these premiums are conbined with all revenue from sales of fat lambs, including any consolidated premiums, to give a total revenue figure. It is therefore not possible to distinguish the proportion of net farm income accounted for by variable premiums, either in isolation or in combination with other grants and subsidies. The percentage figures given in the reply of 19 December 1984 at column 200 therefore do not include variable premium payments.

Dried Peas and Beans

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing how much was spent by the EEC on providing support in 1984 for dried peas and beans together with particulars of the expenditure; how much was for human and how much for other consumption; what percentage of the ex-farm price was accounted for by the subsidy directly or indirectly; and if he will provide corresponding figures for the past five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The information available for peas and beans is as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984*
Gross EC expenditure (MECU)	15	27	31	41	85	139

(a) Animal feed	27-40	24-45	28-38	39-44	25-44	†44-48
(b) Human consumption‡				22	19-32	†19-28

Note:
Separate information for animal feed and human consumption aid expenditure is not available.

† 1984-85 marketing year to date.
‡ This scheme was introduced in 1982.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the differences between the support price and the market price for sheepmeat in 1983-84, 1984-85 to date and in 1969.

Mr. MacGregor: The following table gives the information requested. However, the mechanisms of the fat sheep guarantee scheme which applied in 1969 differed from those of the Community sheepmeat regime which replaced it in 1980.

	1969-70	1983-84	1984-85
Fat Sheep Guarantee Scheme
Guaranteed price £/100kg	40·04
Community Sheepmeat Regime
Basic price £/100kg		257·40	264·81
Average guide price £/100kg		227·30	225·09
Market Price
Annual Average Market Price p/kg	38·94	147·90	*165·23

* Due to the seasonality of market prices, this figure based on the marketing year to date is not comparable with other figures in the table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the allowances of all kinds paid for rearing hill sheep have exceeded the difference between the market price and the guaranteed price of sheepmeat derived from an average hill sheep.

Mr. MacGregor: I regret that the analysis requested is not possible because the guaranteed price for sheepmeat relates to the price of finished slaughter lambs of certifiable quality, whereas most hill sheep are sold as stores or for breeding or as cull ewes.

Horticultural Land

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the distribution of horticultural land by broad sub-division of product in 1955, 1965, 1970, 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is as follows:

	Hectares
	1955	1965	1970	1979	1984
Vegetables grown in the open	177,600	142,100	198,400	193,600	139,600
Orchard fruit	102,800	78,400	63,200	46,300	37,100
Small fruit	16,600	15,000	13,000	13,800	12,900
Hardy nursery stock, bulbs and flowers	10,900	13,300	14,300	11,600	11,400
Area under glass or plastic covered structures	1,800	2,000	1,800	2,100	2,100

Agricultural Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants are payable for investment in agriculture; and how much grant-aided investment has taken place in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Fenner: A wide range of investments may be grant-aided under various schemes, not all of which apply throughout the United Kingdom. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Drainage

Mr. Freeman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he plans to reduce land drainage grants below the present 15 per cent. level.

Mrs. Fenner: We have no such plans.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss long term investment plans.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest, including investment. We are next due to meet him on 2 April.

"Marine Pilotage"

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in response to the consultative document, "Marine Pilotage"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Over 300 organisations and individuals have commented on the consultative document. The proposal to transfer pilotage responsibilities to the ports has been welcomed by almost all parties except the pilots. The latter have expressed concern about various matters, including naturally the terms of compensation for pilots who would be made surplus and the basis on which those who would remain would be employed.

I shall consider very carefully all the comments which have been made before deciding how to carry matters forward and what proposals to bring before Parliament.

Airports

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the likely future administrative arrangements for those airports currently operated by the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Local Government Bill provides that metropolitan county council interests in airports will pass to the constituent districts or, failing agreement between the districts, to the appropriate passenger transport authority. The administrative arrangements for these airports will then be a matter for their owners, including those districts or counties already having an interest in these airports. The Government are also considering whether legislation should be brought forward to require that the larger local authority airports should be run through plcs.

Buses

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has recently received from pensioners and pensioner organisations regarding the privatisation of buses.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the publication of the Transport Bill we have received a number of representations from pensioners and their organisations, many of them worried by the mistaken belief that the bus legislation takes away concessionary fares for the elderly. We have explained that this is untrue. Similarly I explained this to a delegation of pensioners I met in Birmingham.

A303 (Road Schemes)

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to speed up progress on road schemes along the A303.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 22 February 1985, c. 630]: There are in all eight schemes in the White Paper "Policy for Roads in England: 1983" main trunk road programme and reserve list. On one of these schemes, Andover to Thruxton, construction work began in April last year. The other seven schemes are progressing on target for work to start in the periods indicated in the White Paper. It is not practicable to advance these start dates which take into account the time required to carry out the statutory and other procedures.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures for the number of employees in employment and the number of self-employed, respectively; on what basis these figures are calculated; and what were the comparable figures five years ago.

Mr. Alan Clark: In September 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, it was estimated that there were 20,780,000 employeees in employment and 2,465,000 self-employed persons. The corresponding figures for September 1979 were 22,728,000 and 1,869,000, respectively.

These estimates are based on data from the census of employment, sample surveys of employers, the census of population, and the labour force survey. The use of these data sources was described in an article on page 319 of the July 1984 edition of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library. The edition of Employment Gazette to be published on 28 March will include an updated article describing the use made of revised and 1984 results now available from the labour force survey.

Unionised Labour

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) male manual workers and (b) male non-manual workers is unionised.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information on trade union membership does not distinguish between manual and non-manual workers. (See analyses in the January 1985 issue of Employment Gazette, pages 28-30).

Growth Rate

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how the growth rate of population in Britain of working age compares with that of other Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is given for major Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries in the following table, for the population aged 15-64 over the most recent available common period.

Population aged 15-64 average annual rate of growth (per cent.), 1979-80

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984, the programme of action on women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A Departmental joint management and trade union review group was set up in 1983 specifically to review policy on matters concerning the employment of women in the Department of Employment group, and will shortly be considering proposals to extend monitoring. New guidance has been issued to help managers avoid discrimination in recruitment and promotion, to encourage more opportunities for part-time work and to provide preferential reinstatement terms for staff who resign for domestic reasons. All staff are encouraged to attend developmental courses and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available: use is being made of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women.

Community Programme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what number and percentage of people currently on the community programme have refused training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No information on this is collected.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how the cost per person per week of the community programme compares with the cost of the community enterprise programme at constant prices.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 7 March 1985 at columns 589-90.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on discussions between Ministers in his Department and the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission concerning changes in the eligibility criteria for the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 18 December 1984 at column 106. I subsequently wrote to Baroness Platt on 15 January.

Humberside

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Employment which are the 10 largest employers in the county of Humberside; and how many persons are employed by these employers on the youth training programme, community programme and young workers' scheme, respectively.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department's employment statistics are collected under the Statistics of Trade Act (1947) which specifically prohibits disclosure of any details of individual firms.

Available information which relates to the largest 10 employers in the county of Humberside at the time of the 1981 census is set out below:

	Number
Numbers in training on the Youth Training Scheme at 11.3.85	458
Numbers supported under the Community Programme at 31.1.85	720
Number currently supported under the Young Workers Scheme at 11.3.85	0

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are employed on the youth training scheme and young workers' scheme by Humberside county council.

Mr. Peter Morrison: 32 young people (some of whom may have employee status) are currently in training on a mode A youth training scheme with Humberside county council. In addition, the Council has 1,319 young people in training on college-based mode B2 provision and 75 youngsters in training on a mode B1 training workshop.

Local authorities are not eligible for support under the young workers scheme.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed people are employed on the community programme by Humberside county council.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On 31 January 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, 132 long term unemployed people were employed by Humberside county council on community programme projects.

ENVIRONMENT

Heating Charges

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to issue regulations giving public sector tenants the right to information about their heating charges as provided for in section 29 of the Housing and Building Control Act 1984.

Sir George Young: Within the next 12 months.

Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to sanction the use of commissioners in the administration of the city of Liverpool's affairs.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have no powers to appoint commissioners.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why he overruled the recommendation of his inspector following a public inquiry into the Clayton square and Cases street development in Liverpool.

(2) what criteria he used in arriving at his Cases street and Clayton square development decision in Liverpool.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I would refer the hon. Member to my decision letter.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied that the issues involved in the Cases street and Clayton square development were fully examined in the public inquiry.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Yes.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the sums of money already spent by George Wimpy and Co. on the proposed development of Cases street and Clayton square in Liverpool, were taken into account in his decision to allow the development to proceed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The sums of money in question were not a material consideration in my decision.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public inquiries have been held since May 1979; how many have taken place since he became Secretary of State; how many recommendations of inspectors have been upheld by him or his predecessors; and how many he has rejected.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Figures for inquiries on appeals made under section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 are given in the following table. Details of other inquiries held by my predecessors and myself are not readily available.

	(a) All section 36 inquiries decided	(b) Secretary of State section 36 inquiries decided	(c) Section 36 inquiries where inspector's report not upheld
1980	2,786	845	15
1981	2,913	919	34
1982	2,723	596	20
1983	†2,257	370	13
1984	1,551	253	16

* 1,578 of these inquiries were held in May-December 1979.
† 1,184 of these inquiries were held in June-December 1983.
Analyses within years are not readily available for figures in columns (b) and (c).

Sabarr Collective, Brixton

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when and in what circumstances inner city partnership funds ceased to be paid to Sabarr collective, Brixton; and what lessons have been learned from the project.

Sir George Young: Payment of urban programme grant to the Sabarr collective was suspended by Lambeth council from January 1984 because of accounting difficulties which I understand have still to be resolved.

The course of this project demonstrates the need for effective financial management of individual urban programme projects.

Rates Act 1984

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes announcing further designations under the Rates Act 1984 in respect of 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have yet to consider designations for 1986-87.

Rent Acts

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to bring forward proposals for reforming the Rent Acts.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friend is examining the legislation relating to the private rented sector. This is a complex subject which requires careful consideration. The review will be completed as soon as possible.

Empty Properties (London)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last discussed with the London Boroughs Association the number of empty council properties in the Greater London council area.

Sir George Young: The London Boroughs Association was represented at the meeting of the Housing consultative Council on 30 November 1984 at which my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction discussed the Department's report of its meetings with 30 local authorities, 13 of them in London, about their empty dwellings. The Department is now consulting the association about our draft circular on local authority empty dwellings.

High Rise Blocks

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of children living above the second floor in high rise blocks.

Sir George Young: Between 130,000 and 170,000 children are estimated to have been living above the second floor in England in 1982. Separate figures for high rise blocks are not available.

Greater London Enterprise Board

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will meet directors of the Greater London Enterprise Board to discuss the levels of investment it will be able to make in job creation and job preservation projects within the grant limits totalling £4·9 million which he recently approved.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government met representatives of the Greater London council and the Greater London Enterprise Board last month to discuss the council's proposals for providing funding for the board under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972. It is understood that the sum of £4·896 million approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the purposes of section 7 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 following that meeting will enable the board to discharge contractual liabilities arising throughout 1985-86, to meet its staffing and overheads costs in the first quarter of the year, and otherwise provide finance for a measure of continuity for such other investment activities as the board wishes to undertake.

In considering any applications for consent to further expenditure under section 137 by the GLC for funding of the Greater London Enterprise Board in 1985-86 my right hon. Friend will wish to take into account, inter alia, the extent to which the liabilities of the GLC will survive abolition of the council and also whether adequate arrangements exist for ensuring, after abolition of the GLC, that the board will be accountable to ratepayers for the application of funds provided by the council.

Children's Play Facilities

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the provision of facilities for children's play out of school.

Mr. Macfarlane: Out of school facilities are essentially a matter for local decision and provision by local authorities and the voluntary sector. The Government provide grant support, both through the urban programme and to the National Out of School Alliance (which in 1984-85 received £47,000 towards its development of community schemes). Additionally, we are funding Play Board the voluntary agency recently established to promote opportunities for children's play.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the maximum, minimum, average and weighted mean levels per acre of compensation paid by the Nature Conservancy Council under management agreements in sites of special scientific interest, signed in the last three years for which figures are available, for both upland and lowland sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, since the enactment of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, 130 management agreements have been entered into by the Nature Conservancy Council. Payments under these range from agreements concluded at negligible cost to £219 per acre at the upper end. The average payment is around £12 per acre.

Council House Sales

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many purchasers of former council houses under the right-to-buy legislation have applied to sell their home back to the local authority; and on how many others the local authority is taking action to repossess.

Sir George Young: In 1983-84 local authorities repossessed about 840 properties mortgaged to them. This figure represented 0·13 per cent. of outstanding loans on former council and private dwellings. Local authorities do not need my right hon. Friend's consent to repurchase dwellings mortgaged to them if the borrower is in default, and the number of such purchases is not known.

Football Matches (Spectator Violence)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his consultations with the relevant parties following the publication of the interdepartmental working group's report in football spectator violence.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson), on 21 January 1985, at column 263. I have not yet received the written responses of all the 17 organisations consulted. When these have been submitted and properly considered, the Government will make a further statement.

Planning Applications

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many planning applications have been submitted to him on appeal, or called in by him for determination, in each designated green belt area, respectively, in the last year for which figures are available; and how many were upheld;

(2) how many planning applications have been submitted to him on appeal, or called in by him for determination, relating to land in the designated green belts in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively; and how many were upheld.

Mr. Macfarlane: The information is not yet available in the form requested. The number of planning appeals in designated green belts recorded as having been decided by inspectors since 1981 is as follows:

	Appeals Decided	Number Upheld (per cent.)
1981	857	206 (24)
1982	722	127 (18)
1983	472	113 (24)
1984	588	126 (21)

Listed Buildings

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many buildings were newly listed in the latest 12-month period for which figures are available;

(2) how many listed buildings were demolished in the latest 12-month period for which figures are available;

(3) what is the total number of listed buildings currently in each grade, respectively.

Mr. Macfarlane: The numbers of listed buildings and their grading at 31 December 1983 and at 31 December 1984 (the latest date for which figures are available) are as follows:

Grade	31 December 1983	31 December 1984
I	5,517	5,625
TOTAL	308,857	338,079

* Grade II* buildings are not separately identified in these figures, but included in the numbers given for grade II buildings.

The increase in the total number of listed buildings between 31 December 1983 and 31 December 1984 was thus 29,222.

In the 12-month period to 31 December 1984, consent was given for the total or partial demolition of the following numbers of listed buildings:

Grade	Total demolition	Partial demolition
I	nil	94
II	3	155
II	185	1,836
TOTAL	188	2,085

Green Belt

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the approximate area of each designated and confirmed green belt area in England.

Mr. Macfarlane: The latest available information was supplied to the Select Committee on the Environment for its report on "Green Belt and Land for Housing". The broad areas of green belt approved in structure plans are as follows:

	Acres (approximate)
Metropolitan Green Belt	1,200,000
Burton-Swadlincote Green Belt	2,000
West Midlands Green Belt	650,000
Greater Manchester, Central Lancashire, Merseyside/ Wirral Green Belts	750,000
Northumberland and Tyne and Wear Green Belts	200,000
Nottinghamshire/Derby Green Belt	200,000
York Green Belt	50,000
South and West Yorkshire Green Belt	800,000
Oxford Green Belt	100,000
Gloucester/Cheltenham Green Belt	20,000
Stoke on Trent Green Belt	125,000
Cambridge Green Belt	26,550
South West Hampshire/South East Dorset Green Belt	220,000

Since the Committee reported, an alteration to Hertfordshire structure plan has been approved including a small extension to green belt to the east of Luton. The structure plan for Avon, which includes a proposal for a green belt of approximately 150,000 acres, is still being considered.

Local Authority Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify for local authorities in England the totals for each service block and for non-prescribed expenditure for each year since 1981-82 as follows: (a) gross capital spending, (b) total capital receipts, (c) net capital spending, (d) the cash limit and (e) the sum of allocations to individual authorities, differentiating where necessary between the Greater London council and other local authorities.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The following table gives the information requested for capital expenditure against the DOE/LA1 cash limit.

* Including the capital value of leased assets.

† In 1981-82, 1982-83, and 1983-84 urban programme provision and allocations are included in the other services block but expenditure is included under the relevant service blocks. The urban programme allocations in the three years were £83 million, £174 million and £179 million respectively.

‡ The figures for 1984-85 and 1985-86 exclude local authority capital expenditure on urban programme and derelict land, which is now included in the DOE UA1 cash limit and for which provision in 1984-85 and 1985-86 is £296 million and £279 million respectively.

Allocations in 1985-86 will be increased by 5 per cent. across all service blocks for authorities complying with my request for restraint in 1984-85.

The Government do not collect complete information on non-prescribed expenditure. The above figures include some non-prescribed expenditure, but it is not possible to identify this separately by service block.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of local authority rent arrears; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: Figures collected by my Department indicate that on 31 March 1984 gross rent arrears due to local authorities in England and Wales totalled £188 million, of which £47 million were arrears of former tenants. The total represented 5·4 per cent. of the rent collectable and compares with arrears of £176 million or 5 per cent. of the rent collectable a year earlier.

Although the increase was less than in previous years, rent arrears remain far too high, particularly in London and in metropolitan areas.

Tenants who fail to pay their rent promptly place a heavy and unnecessary burden on other members of the community.

My Department and the Audit Commission have issued comprehensive advice on good management practice to reduce rent arrears. Landlords should study and take heed of that advice.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Coal Industry

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General whether, in view of the rate of acquittal for less serious offences which were alleged to have taken place in the course of the mining dispute, he will ask the Director of Public Prosecutions to consult and advise chief constables as regards the handling of the less serious offences still to be determined.

The Attorney-General: It is not the practice of the Director of Public Prosecutions to give to chief constables policy advice of the nature suggested.

Admiral of the Fleet, Lord Lewin

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General if he is now in a position to state whether it is proposed to prosecute Admiral of the Fleet, Lord Lewin, for offences under the Official Secrets Act.

The Attorney-General: I have received a report from the Director of Public Prosecutions in the light of investigations made by the Metropolitan police. No evidence has been forthcoming that Lord Lewin has committed any offence and I therefore propose to take no further action in this matter.

Northern Ireland (Supergrass Evidence)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Attorney-General how many people charged with offences on the evidence of converted terrorists have had the charges withdrawn as a result of the evidence being withdrawn.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1985, c. 442]: The information is as follows: 143 since 1980.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Aerospace

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met British Aerospace representatives to discuss the future of the company.

Mr. Pattie [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 322]: I most recently met the chairman of BAe last week and I am now in a position to make a statement about progress on the proposed sale of the Government shareholding in the company.

I announced on 15 January that, subject to the approval, as necessary, of the company's shareholders, it is intended that the offer for sale should take the form of a simultaneous offering of the Government's existing shares and new shares issued by the company. Subject to satisfactory market conditions and the completion of all necessary arrangements, it is intended that the offer will take place early in May. It is intended that application moneys in respect of the shares to be offered should be payable in two instalments.

Existing shareholders, subject to any legal restrictions overseas, will have preferential entitlements to acquire, pro rata to their existing shareholdings, the new shares to be issued by the company. The Government do not intend to take up their preferential entitlement to the new shares. The new shares to which the Government would have been entitled, together with any others which are not taken up by shareholders and the Government's existing shares, will be made available under the public offer and marketed to financial institutions, employees, existing shareholders and the wider public. In the event of an over-subscription, up to 5 million of the shares being sold by the Government will be reserved for preferential allocation to employees.

Selling commissions will be payable to stockbrokers, licensed dealers, members of the National Association of Securities Dealers and Investment Managers and exempted dealers at the rate of 1¼ per cent. on allotments of shares to a fully-paid value of £10,000 or less in respect of applications submitted by them on behalf of others; and on larger allotments at the rate of ½ per cent. subject to a minimum of £125. Reallowance of part of these commissions will be permitted to certain specified financial intermediaries.

The expenses of the offer will in general be shared between the company and the Government in the same ratio as the proceeds of issue of new shares by the company bear to the proceeds of the sale of the Government's shareholding. However, certain expenses relating to advice which is relevant specifically to only one of the two parties will be borne separately by the party concerned.

Scrap Metal and Castings

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the annual levels of exports and imports of (a) scrap metal as a raw material and (b) castings, for each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Butcher: The information distinguishable in the United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics is as follows:

	Value £ millions

United States (Export Restraints)

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the Government of the United States of America concerning attempts to restrain legal exports of goods from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade have emphasised their continuing rejection of the extra-territorial application of US export controls in a number of contacts with senior members of the US Administration in the last year. The Minister of State for Industry and Information Technology reiterated the Government's views during his visit to Washington in January.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service".

Mr. Butcher: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working. Women are being encouraged to attend courses (particularly development courses) and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available. Use is being made of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women only and arrangements are well in hand to run a management course this year in the Department for women only.

Rolls-Royce (South Africa)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what licensing arrangements exist for the construction of Rolls-Royce aircraft engines in South Africa.

Mr. Butcher: The Italian firm Piaggio has a licence to manufacture the Rolls-Royce Viper engine. Under the terms of this licence, sub-licences may be granted to third parties. Piaggio granted sub-licences for the manufacture of Viper 11 and Viper 540 engines in South Africa in 1964 and 1971 respectively.

Cassette Tapes (Levy)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from organisations representing disabled people about the impact on the disabled of a levy on blank cassette tapes; what response he is making; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Green Paper "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material" (Cmnd. 9445) published on 19 February took account of previous representations on the effect of a tape levy from organisations representing disabled people. Thus, while the paper contains proposals to introduce a levy on blank recording tape as a way of remunerating copyright owners for the use made of their works by those who tape them at home, it envisages rebates or exemptions for blind and other seriously handicapped people who use audio tape on a large scale without infringing copyright. A number of organisations representing disabled people have already commented on the Green Paper proposals and more are expected to do so before the end of the consultation period. We shall decide whether to introduce a levy only after full consideration of all the comments received.

Overseas Projects Fund

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the operation of the overseas projects fund.

Mr. Fletcher: Yes.

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the British Overseas Trade Board budget is planned to be allocated to (a) overseas trade fairs, (b) the market entry guarantee scheme and (c) the overseas project fund in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Fletcher: The information requested is as follows:

	Percentage of BOTB Net Expenditure
	1985-86 (Note 1)	1986-87 (Note 1)
Overseas Trade Fairs	45	41
Market Entry Guarantee Scheme	8	8
Overseas Projects Fund	16	18

Notes:

1. Figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are proposals which are subject to final decision by the BOTB in the light of response to its consultation document, a copy of which is in the Library.
2. The BOTB has not yet produced proposals for the allocation of funds between services within its budget for 1987-88.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the proportion of small companies among first time exhibitors at British Overseas Trade Board supported trade fairs in each year since 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: Annual details of the size of companies which have used the British Overseas Trade Board's schemes of support at overseas trade fairs are not known. But an independent consultant's survey in 1983 established that overall about 60 per cent. of the exhibitors who have used these schemes have fewer than 100 employees. An internal study in 1984 showed that about 70 per cent. have 200 employees or less.

Statistics about the number of occasions on which particular companies have exhibited at each particular trade fair where there is a BOTB group have been kept only since 1981. The pattern of first time exhibitors has been:

	Number
1981	3,350
1982	3,737
1984	3,193

There is no reason to suppose that the pattern was different before 1981 or that the proportion of small companies among the newcomers is less than the overall proportion of small companies in BOTB assisted groups of exhibitors.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service."

Sir Keith Joseph: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working. Women are being encouraged to attend courses (particularly developmental courses) and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available. Use is being made of the Civil Service college course in the middle management for women only, and consideration is being given to whether a joint training course for women can be introduced into our departmental training programme, in co-operation with other small, local departments.

Manchester (Capital Education Expenditure)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the level of prescribed capital expenditure for the city of Manchester for education for 1983-84, 1984-85, and 1985-86 at constant prices; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The prescribed capital expenditure allocations for education announced for the city of Manchester for the years in question at 1983-84 constant prices are as follows:

1984-85	6,679,700
1985-86	6,805,900

1983-84 constant prices have been obtained by adjusting cash figures by the latest forecast for GDP deflator at market prices.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to pupil-teacher ratios at primary and secondary level in each of the European Economic Community nations.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is shown in the following table, but it is not possible to provide data on a strictly comparable basis for each country. In particular, figures for the United Kingdom and Germany are based on full-time equivalent pupils divided by full-time equivalent teachers, while for other countries the figures are simply total pupils divided by total teachers. Moreover the definition of "teacher" can vary between countries and may include staff not engaged in teaching. Reference is made to further differences in the footnotes to the table.

Manchester (High Schools and Sixth Form Colleges)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if, in the light of his rejection of the draft articles of government for county high schools and sixth form colleges as submitted by the city of Manchester on 7 September 1982, he plans to invite the city to submit revised proposals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his reason for not approving the draft articles of government for county high schools and sixth form colleges as submitted by the city of Manchester on 7 September 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In September 1982 the authority asked the Department informally whether proposed revisions to articles of government were such as would receive the necessary approval. The proposals could be seen as giving the authority power to override the responsibilities allocated in the articles, contrary to my right hon. Friend's policy for clarity in such matters. The Department's view that the amendments would thus be unacceptable have been the subject of various exchanges with the authority, with which the matter currently rests: it needs no invitation to make a fresh approach.

Higher Education

Mr. Tony Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is able to announce his decisions on local authority higher education provision in 1985-86 and on the distribution of the advanced further education pool for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1984, c. 141-43]: I have today written to the chairman of the committee of the National Advisory Body (NAB) accepting the NAB's advice on the distribution of the sum of £2·5 million which was set aside from the advanced futher education quantum of £620 million for 1985-86 for the selective support of research in a number of major institutions as I announced in the House on 18 December.

The NAB's advice is based on very careful consideration of requests from institutions for funding totalling £14 million. NAB recommends that financial allocations between £75,000 and £150,000 be made to 21 institutions (including 20 polytechnics), the funds to support scientific and technological work, as follows:

	£'000s
Central London Polytechnic	150
Coventry Polytechnic	150
Hatfield Polytechnic	150
Kingston Polytechnic	150
Leicester Polytechnic	150
Liverpool Polytechnic	150
Newcastle Polytechnic	150
Plymouth Polytechnic	150
Portsmouth Polytechnic	150
South Bank Polytechnic	150
Trent Polytechnic	150
Brighton Polytechnic	100
Camborne School of Mines	100
Manchester Polytechnic	100
Sheffield City Polytechnic	100
Bristol Polytechnic	75
City of London Polytechnic	75
Lancashire Polytechnic	75
Teesside Polytechnic	75
Thames Polytechnic	75
Wolverhampton Polytechnic	75
Total	2,500

I welcome the selectivity which underpins these allocations, since I am convinced that, particularly when resources are limited, a selective approach towards allocations enables the funds available to be deployed with maximum effectiveness.

Letters are today being sent to local education authorities and institutions notifying them of my decisions regarding the research initiative. Copies of my letter to the NAB committee chairman have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Family Law

45. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Law Commission and the Scottish Law Commission report on Family Law, Custody of Children — Jurisdiction and Enforcement within the United Kingdom, Cmnd. 9419.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The two Law Commissions have been working on this matter since 1972. Their report draws attention to the complexity of the present rules of custody jurisdiction within the three separate legal systems involved and was published only two months ago. The commissions' recommendations are likely to be generally acceptable and the Government are considering when it may be possible to introduce legislation on the lines of the recommendations. There is no prospect of introducing such legislation during the current parliamentary Session.

Venison

46. Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions took place for the illegal sale of venison in 1984 or the latest convenient year.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: A person who sells venison illegally commits an offence under the Sale of Venison (Scotland) Act 1968 or section 25D of the Deer (Scotland) Act 1959. No separate statistics are kept and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Architects Registration Act 1938 (Contravention)

Mr. Chapman asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make a statement explaining why the procurator fiscal's office did not take proceedings in a case brought to his attention by the Architects Registration Council of the United Kingdom concerning an alleged contravention of section 1 of the Architects Registration Act 1938 in respect of an incident on 7 September 1983.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: An alleged breach of sections 1 and 3 of the Architects Registration Act 1938 was reported to the procurator fiscal at Edinburgh on 7 November 1983. The procurator fiscal instructed the police to make inquiries and to report the results of their investigation to him. Investigation was made by them and when the police report was received by the procurator fiscal it was considered and marked "no proceedings".

WALES

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to the Welsh water authority's external financing limit and his other cash limits for 1984-85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh water authority estimates that it will exceed the 1984-85 external financing limit of £19·6 million by about £3 million. This has arisen because of the additional costs incurred in last year's drought and severance payments following the major reorganisation undertaken by the authority in the autumn of 1984 and despite the authority achieving considerable offsetting savings in revenue and capital expenditure. In these exceptional circumstances I have increased the water authority's external financing limit for 1984-85 by £3 million from £19·6 million to £22·6 million. Offsetting savings have been found from the cash limit on Class XVI, 1, which has been reduced by £3 million from £741,490,000 to £738,490,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Misuse of Drugs Tribunals

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sittings there have been in each year since 1971 of misuse of drugs tribunals; and how many doctors have been prohibited from prescribing controlled drugs as a result of tribunal hearings.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of tribunal sittings	Number of doctors prohibited from prescribing some or all controlled drugs
1972	—	—
1973	—	—
1974	1	—
1975	—	—
1980	—	—
1981	—	—
1982	—	—
1983	3	3

Notes

(1) A direction given under section 13 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 must specify the controlled drugs to which it relates. Some directions have specified only a limited range of controlled drugs, taking into account the circumstances in those cases.

(2) Some directions have not taken effect until the year following the tribunal sitting; but the figures in column 2 relate to the year in which the tribunal heard the case.

(3) Temporary directions, given in accordance with section 15 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, are not included in the table; there was one such direction in 1978 and three in 1984.

Drugs Inspectorate

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed within his Department's drugs inspectorate; and with what qualifications.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 22 February at column 622.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the River Way holding and training centre, Greenwich, London, is licensed for animal experimentation.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the training that is given at the River Way holding and training centre, Greenwich, London; who uses the centre; and for what purpose;

(2) what is the number of animals being kept at the River Way holding and training centre, Greenwich, London; and for what purpose they are used;

(3) what type of animal accommodation is provided at the River Way holding and training centre, Greenwich; when the centre was last visited and by whom; and if there was a report published.

Mr. Mellor: We have no information about this establishment.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Brittan: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working. Women are being encouraged to attend courses —particularly developmental courses—and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available, and use is also being made of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women.

Citizenship

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will designate service with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development as a form of service under the British Citizenship (Designated Service) Order 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to do so.

Metropolitan Police (Early Retirement)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving officers in the Metropolitan police have applied for early retirement, by month, from August 1984 to the present.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the number of Metropolitan police officers who have retired in each month since August 1984 before reaching the normal retirement age is as follows:

	Number
August 1984	43
September 1984	64
October 1984	46
November 1984	51
December 1984	66
January 1985	53
February 1985	52

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the amount of mutual aid sent by the metropolitan police to other forces by month during the course of the miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Pembroke National Park

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of land in the Pembroke national park has been released by his Department, since the publication of the Nugent committee's report; and if he will list those areas which have been released in whole or in part.

Mr. Lee: The following areas have been sold since the publication of the report of the defence lands committee:

St. David's airfield (part)	43
Castlemartin range (part)	2
East Moor Cliff (whole)	43
Penally Proud Giltar training area (whole)	9
Manorbier range (part)	184

Disposals amount to some 4 per cent. of Ministry of Defence landholdings in the park in 1973.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what new acquisitions have been made of land in the Pembroke national park by his Department since the publication of the Nugent committee's report; and what is the total percentage of land in the Pembroke national park which is currently owned or occupied by his Department.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence has not purchased any land in the Pembrokeshire coast national park since the publication of the report of the defence lands committee in 1973. Less than 5 per cent. of the land in the park is owned by the Ministry of Defence.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the defence of the Falkland Islands since the end of the conflict; and what percentage of the expenditure involved represents payments to United Kingdom-based contractors in respect of construction works, and so on.

Mr. Stanley: For total costs, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 29 January at columns 155-56. For the costs of construction and works, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the under-Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 30 January at column 181. All payments have been made to United Kingdom based contractors, although in a few cases material and equipment have been procured by the main contractors from non-United Kingdom-based suppliers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Botswana

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government's Ministers have discussed with the Botswana Government recent threats of aggression by the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Renton: My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) was in Botswana in February and discussed with the Botswana Government recent problems in their relations with South Africa. I understand that talks to resolve these have now taken place between the two countries.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting of his Department's officials with the South African ambassador on 25 February.

Mr. Renton: My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) met the South African ambassador on 25 February to discuss recent developments in South Africa. He explained that we welcomed some positive developments—such as the announcement of 99-year leasehold rights for Cape Flats townships—but were concerned at others, including the arrest of the United Democratic Front leaders and in particular the detention of four without charge.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in relation to the aide memoire of Her Majesty's Government dated 15 February 1965 to the South African Government setting out categories of military equipment which Her Majesty's Government were prepared in principle to supply to South Africa, if any equipment is now supplied; and if the supply of items for any particular category has been terminated.

Mr. Renton: Any arrangements between the United Kingdom and South Africa for the supply of military equipment prior to 1977 were overtaken by the obligations incurred as a result of the adoption in that year of United Nations Security Council resolution 418.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will require the British military attaché in South Africa to establish whether the Plessey AR3D radar system delivered to South Africa in 1981 and the Marconi system updating the S247 radar system which was delivered in 1983-84 are being used for the purposes for which the export licences were granted.

Mr. Renton: No. At the time of granting the export licences we were fully satisfied that the equipment was intended for use in air traffic control, having a civil application. I know of nothing to indicate that it is not being used for the purpose for which it was supplied.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to discuss with the Italian Government the termination of the licensing agreement under which Rolls-Royce Viper engines are manufactured for Impala aircraft in South Africa.

Mr. Renton: No. The Italian Government have already made their position clear. In a letter to the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421 (1977) the Italian Government confirmed that in the case of South Africa they had not issued licences since 1972 for component parts of the Viper engine, as reported in the Committee's report adopted on 19 September 1980 (S/14179).

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the South African Government Ministers and the South African Government officials who have been received by Her Majesty's Government during the years 1979 to 1984, giving the names and dates of those meetings.

Mr. Renton: There are no centrally kept records covering such a list. The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions have been given to the United Kingdom delegation regarding Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the inclusion of the phrase "and related material of all types" in operative paragraph 2 of the draft United Nations Security Council Resolution 558 (1984).

Mr. Renton: There were discussions at the United Nations on several draft texts before the final version was tabled by the sponsor and adopted as Security Council resolution 558. Instructions given to the United Kingdom delegation in these, and in other negotiations, remain confidential, but they reflected our concern to find a practicable solution which would command the support of all members.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the explanation of vote made by the United Kingdom representative at the United Nations Security Council when it adopted Security Council Resolution 558 (1984).

Mr. Renton: Yes. The text of the Explanation of Vote delivered by the United Kingdom representative is reproduced as follows:

"The recent turmoil in South Africa has claimed many lives. The situation there continues to be tense and highly charged. It is not a situation to which this Council can remain indifferent. The continuing tragedy of South Africa remains a source of grave concern to us all.

It has been the constant view of successive British Governments that apartheid is unacceptable morally and was bound to prove unworkable in practice. We accordingly believe that it is right to maintain strong pressure on the South African Government both bilaterally and through the United Nations to abandon and dismantle apartheid. The Arms Embargo adopted under Security Council Resolution 418 has been an appropriate instrument of such pressure and has been implemented strictly in British legislation and by British courts.

The most recent events in South Africa have caused great distress to the British Government, in Parliament and among the British public, as they have to many other countries, and particularly to our friends and partners in Africa. It is right that the Security Council should now consider whether there are additional ways of influencing the South African Government to turn away from apartheid and respect the civil and political rights of all the people of South Africa.

At the same time, the Council must consider most carefully and responsibly the consequences of its actions. The Council must not abdicate its responsibilities by pursuing measures—whatever their popular appeal—which would in practice be counter-productive. Certain suggestions which are frequently aired in our view would exacerbate the situation in South and Southern Africa, and could cause grave damage to states neighbouring South Africa. The Security Council must pay scrupulous attention to the Charter, and must not lightly enter into areas such as Chapter VII measures.

We are, in principle, opposed to trade sanctions. Wide economic sanctions are difficult to enforce, lead to a hardening of views and tend to harm those who are poorest and most vulnerable. Trade, on the other hand, is a channel for widening mutual understanding and for exercising a moderating influence.

By adopting a non-mandatory resolution, directed against importers, the Council has pursued a realistic course. Let me stress that my own Government does not import arms from South Africa. I trust that the same is true for other members of the Security Council. Our message, as a Council, to states outside this organ is that they should follow suit.

My delegation has co-operated closely with the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands over this Resolution. We expressed to him the hope that he could find a text which would command unanimous support, and we made specific suggestions to this effect. We are glad that he has succeeded and I would like to pay tribute to him for the thoroughness and the skill with which he has consulted members of the Council and embodied the consensus of their views.

It is against this background that my delegation has supported the present Resolution. In so doing we are also reflecting both our ineradicable opposition to apartheid and our specific disapproval of the actions of the South African Government in a recent and relevant case."

Falkland Islands

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether South Africa is still being used as a staging post for personnel involved in the construction of the airport on the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: The management of the Mount Pleasant project is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I understand that the contractors continue to use Cape Town as a staging post; this is a purely commercial arrangement.

FIDA '84 International Air Show, Chile

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government were represented at the FIDA '84 international air show in Santiago, Chile, in March 1984.

Mr. Renton: In response to a request from the Society of British Aerospace Companies, we helped sponsor through the British Overseas Trade Board's joint venture scheme, 12 British firms which participated in the Santiago international air show (FIDA) in March 1984. As part of thier normal commercial duties in support of British exports, Her Majesty's ambassador Santiago and members of his staff visited the air show and toured the British stands.

Embassy (Santo Domingo)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what revenue he expects to accrue to Her Majesty's Government as a result of the disposal of the Government's interest in the building housing Her Majesty's embassy, Santo Domingo, and other properties retained for the use of the ambassador and his staff.

Mr. Renton: We own no property in Santo Domingo. There will therefore be no sale receipts as a result of the closure of Her Majesty's embassy there.

United Nations (Security Council Committee Report)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations to support the proposal made in the Security Council on 13 December 1984 by the then Chairman of the Security Council Committee established under Resolution 421 (1977) that the United Nations Security Council considers the Committee's report (S-14179); and if he will instruct the United Kingdom delegation to support the recommendations contained in paragraph 81 of this report.

Mr. Renton: As is recorded in paragraph 82 of the report to which the hon. Member refers, the United Kingdom delegation placed a general reservation on the recommendation in paragraph 81 of the report. Our position is thus already on record.

EC (Dooge Committee)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members there are on the Dooge Committee for EEC Institutions; who they are; by whom each was appointed; and whom each member represents.

Mr. Renton: The 11 members of the Dooge Committee are:

Belgium: — Mr. Fernand Herman (Member of European Parliament).

Denmark: — Mr. Otto Moller (Secretary-General, Ministry of Foreign Affairs).

Federal Republic of Germany: — Mr. Jürgen Rühfus (State Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs).

Greece: — Mr. Ioannis Papantoniou (Former Member of European Parliament and Special Advisor to Prime Minister).

France: — Mr. Maurice Faure (Former Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs).

Ireland: — Professor James Dooge (Senator).

Italy: — Mr. Mauro Ferri (Former Member of European Parliament).

Luxembourg: — Mr. Jean Dondelinger (Secretary-General, Ministery of Foreign Affairs).

Netherlands: — Mr. Willem Van Eekelen (State Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs).

United Kingdom: — Mr. Malcolm Rifkind (Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office).

Commission: — Mr. Carlo Ripa di Meana.

They are the personal representatives of the Heads of State or of Government by whom they are appointed. The Commission representative was appointed by the President of the Commission.

Libya

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has that the President of Libya is offering support to Irish Republican Army terrorists and self-styled urban guerilla groups in other European Economic Community countries; and what steps the Government are taking to safeguard the United Kingdom against such threats.

Mr. Renton: We have seen reports of Colonel Gadhafi's recent speech threatening support for European terrorist movements. We view such statements with concern and have made this clear to the Libyans. We remain constantly on the lookout for evidence of terrorist threats from whatever quarter.

Arms Control

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist for ensuring that the United States Administration are made aware of Her Majesty's Government's views on arms control and disarmament issues.

Mr. Luce: We keep in close and regular touch with the United States, as with other allies, at a variety of levels. Our discussions cover the whole range of arms control and disarmament issues. Such issues were discussed in depth during the recent visit to Washington of my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary. They feature prominently on the agenda for talks at ministerial level. In parallel with these exchanges, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Ministry of Defence officials responsible for these questions hold frequent bilateral discussions with their American counterparts.

Arms control issues are also the subject of regular consultation within the North Atlantic Alliance and in a variety of other fora. In particular, the North Atlantic Council is employed frequently for this purpose; there is also detailed consideration of intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) issues in NATO's Special Consultative Group. In addition, United Kingdom representatives to the conference on disarmament in Geneva, to the conference on disarmament in Europe in Stockholm, and at the multilateral and balanced force reductions talks in Vienna, consult extensively with United States and other Western delegates to those negotiations.

British Embassy School, Bonn

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 368, how the pay and conditions of teaching staff in the British embassy school in Bonn, who are currently paid under the Burnham scale appropriate to teachers working in England and Wales, will be affected by the change in the constitution of the School Committee.

Mr. Renton: As I said in my answer to the hon. Member on 4 March, the British embassy school in Bonn is not the direct responsibility of Her Majesty's Government. I am told that pay and conditions are at present being discussed by the management committee with the teachers and that the prospect is that pay and conditions will remain very considerably above Burnham levels.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Family Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the net weekly spending power of a man and a wife, with two children aged 11 and 15 years, whose income is £120 per week, whose rent and rates are £20 and £7 per week, respectively, and who are receiving all state benefits to which they are entitled (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed and assuming that both husband and wife were earning the £4 disregarded income.

Mr. Whitney: The net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged 11 and 15 would be £83·65 if the man's gross earnings were £120 a week, and the family has no other income apart from benefits.

If the family's only income, apart from benefits, was from part-time earnings and both the man and his wife and £4 of their earnings disregarded for supplementary benefit purpose, the net weekly spending power would be £87·45.

The calculations assume "£7 rates" are £5·50 general rate and £1·50 water rate. Other unspecified assumptions are as in the November 1984 edition of the DHSS tax/benefit model tables.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and 11 years whose income is £100 per week and whose rent and rates are £20 and £7, respectively (a) when he is working and (b) if he were unemployed and assuming that he and his wife were both earning the £4 disregarded income and in each case were receiving all the benefits to which they were entitled.

Mr. Whitney: The net weekly spending power of a man with a wife and two children aged eight and 11 would be £79·05 if the man's gross earnings were £100 a week, and the family had no other income apart from benefits.

If the family's only other income, apart from benefits, was from part-time earnings and both the man and his wife had £4 of their earnings disregarded for supplementary benefit purposes, the net weekly spending power would be £82·70.

The calculations assume "£7 rates" are £5·50 general rate and £1·50 water rate. Other unspecified assumptions are as in the November 1984 edition of the DHSS tax/benefit model tables.

Armed Forces (Disablement Benefits)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of disabled service men and service women who receive state benefits as a result of their disablement due to service in the armed forces.

Mr. Newton: At 31 December 1984, 227,500 ex-service men and women were receiving disablement pensions under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department or, for disablement resulting from service between 30 September 1921 and 2 September 1939, under a corresponding scheme administered by the Ministry of Defence.

Dependency Allowance

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to uprate the dependency allowance paid with war disablement pension.

Mr. Newton: No.

Tobacco (Health Warnings)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many meetings officials in his Department have had with the tobacco industry in connection with the renewal of the present agreement concerning health warnings on cigarette advertisements; if he has had representations on this matter from the British Medical Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Discussions with the tobacco industry about replacing the present voluntary advertising agreement, which runs until at least 31 March 1986, have not yet commenced. We have invited representatives of the industry to meet us in the early summer to start the process. We have received representations from the British Medical Association about the voluntary agreements, including the matter of health warnings on cigarette advertisements.

Therapists

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the editor of Remedial Therapist about the shortage of therapists; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received a letter from the editor of Remedial Therapist, which we are considering and will reply shortly.

Reye's Syndrome (Aspirin)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what American and British evidence was considered by the Committee on Safety of Medicines when it looked at the possibility of an association between

Reye's syndrome and the taking of aspirin by children; at how many meetings the possible association was discussed; if the opinions of the American Food and Drugs Administration were sought; what are the conclusions of the Committee; and if they differed from those of the Food and Drugs Administration;

(2) if the Committee on Safety of Medicines has considered the possibility of an association between Reye's syndrome and the taking of aspirin by children in the light of the pilot epidemiological study on Reye's syndrome, published in December 1984 by the Centre for Disease Control in Atlanta, United States of America; and if he will make a statement on the advisability of children taking aspirin.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Committee on Safety of Medicines considered the possibility of an association between Reye's syndrome and aspirin ingestion at its September 1982 meeting. They considered all the available evidence, in particular the reports of three epidemiological studies in the United States of America and reviews of this work by the United States Food and Drugs Administration and other bodies in the United States; and articles in the USA publication "Paediatrics".

The committee also looked at two investigations in the United Kingdom into Reye's syndrome; a national childhood encephalopathy study and a continuing surveillance scheme set up jointly by the British Paediatrics Association and the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre. At that time the committee had received no reports through its adverse reactions reporting system suggesting an association between Reye's syndrome and aspirin ingestion. It has since received one such report.

The committee concluded that, on the available evidence, a causal link between aspirin and Reye's syndrome had not been established. The committee noted that the United States Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, on the basis of the US evidence, but decided that it did not wish to recommend such action in the United Kingdom. It further decided to keep the issue of Reye's syndrome and aspirin under review.

"intended to advise that children with influenza or chicken pox should not be given salicylates and salicylate-containing medications"

The committee is currently considering a summary of preliminary findings of a pilot study by a United States Public Health Service task force, which included members of the Centre for Disease Control, Atlanta. A report of the pilot study has not so far been published. When we have considered the committee's advice on the up-to-date evidence, we shall decide whether any statement is needed on the position in the United Kingdom.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time taken to process an application for a retirement pension at the Newcastle computer centre; what steps are to be taken to improve this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Claims to retirement pension are normally invited four months before a person reaches minimum pension age. Initial action is taken in the local office, which usually forwards the claim to Newcastle following the adjudication officer's decision. The average time taken to process the claim from the local office is normally five working days.

As a result of the recent industrial action, double the normal intake of new claims is currently being received in Newcastle each week so the processing time may be longer than usual. However, local offices make emergency payments of retirement pension if an award is delayed at any stage. The position is expected to be back to normal by mid-June.

If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind in which the processing time has given rise to difficulty perhaps he would write to me and I will look into it.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North about state retirement pensions which was tabled for answer on 25 February.

Mr. Whitney: I have today answered the hon. Member's question.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the likely sum that would be paid to (a) those on average income, (b) those on three quarters average income and (c) those on half average income, assuming the current level of annual increases in earnings and prices as the state earnings-related pension scheme to those who have remained contracted-in since the scheme started in 1985, 1990, 1995, 2000 and 2010, respectively.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 72]: The table shows the amount of additional component which would be payable in addition to the basic pension (currently £35·80 per week) to a person contracted-in to the state earnings-related pension scheme since its inception in 1978. The figures are expressed in constant 1984-85 earnings levels.

1985	12·80	8·80	4·90
1990	21·90	15·20	8·40
1995	31·00	21·50	11·90
2000	36·50	25·20	14·00
2010	36·50	25·20	14·00

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been budgeted for the national publicity campaign which his Department intends to run to advise patients of the introduction of limited list prescribing; and whether this expenditure will be offset against the £75 million savings which he is seeking to make in the National Health Service drugs bill in the coming financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No national advertising is planned, but approximately £30,000 has been budgeted for printing leaflets for patients explaining selected list prescribing. This money will be found from savings on centrally funded services during 1984-85 and will not, therefore, be offset against anticipated savings on the National Health Service drugs bill during 1985-86.

Health Certificates

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assistance is given to unemployed persons who are required to pay a fee to a doctor in order to obtain a health certificate in the course of an application for a job.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Where the cost is not provided or met by the prospective employer, single payments can be made to those entitled to supplementary benefit, including members of the assessment unit, for the cost of a doctor's medical examination fee where the person would otherwise be unable either to take up employment which has been offered to him or to continue in employment which has been taken up during the 14 days immediately preceding the claim.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take steps to introduce a system for the provision of certificates of health within the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is already part of a general medical practitioner's terms of service to issue free of charge a certificate stating that in his opinion a patient is fit for work after a period of sickness.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current fee payable under the National Health Service for a doctor's certificate of health provided as part of an application for employment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No such fee is payable under the National Health Service.

SCOTLAND

Rating System

8. Mr. Hugh Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for reforming the rating system.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend and I have implemented a number of reforms already, in the Rating and Valuation (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 1984. Subsequently, as announced last October, I have been studying, along with Ministerial colleagues south of the border, various aspects of the local government finance system, but it is still too early to say anything about these studies.

33. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the light of his policy towards revaluation, he will now give urgent consideration to a fundamental reform of the rating system.

Mr. George Younger: I am already studying, along with Ministerial colleagues south of the border, various aspects of the local government finance system, but it is still too early to say anything about these studies.

Local Authorities (Meetings)

9. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local government authorities he and his Ministers met in deputations accompanied by the local hon. Member in January or February.

Mr. Younger: Three.

Fish Processing

10. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has had for Government aid to fish processing in north-east Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: In recent representations to my right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister of State, Grampian regional council called for special Government aid for fish processors in their region. Similar representations have also been made by the Federation of North East of Scotland Fish Merchants' Associations.

Forestry Commission ("Broadleaves Review")

12. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission will consult fully private nature conservation bodies on its "Broadleaves Review".

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission published its consultative paper on broadleaves in May last year and received views from a wide range of private nature conservation bodies. The Commission has been taking these views into account in developing policy proposals for discussion at a seminar to be held in May, to which a balanced cross-section of conservation bodies has been invited.

Primary Schools (Pupil Costs)

15. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and how this compares with the figure for 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In 1983-84 net expenditure per pupil in primary schools in Scotland at out-turn prices was £882. This represents an increase of 14 per cent. at constant prices over the figure for 1978-79 which was £410.

Rating Revaluation

16. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on the rating revaluation in Scotland.

Mr. George Younger: I have received about 3,800 representations of various kinds. In response to these, and in particular a representation from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, I announced last Thursday an extra increase of £38·5 million in the domestic element of the rate support grant, which will go a long way toward easing the burden revaluation will shift on to the domestic ratepayer.

23. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will postpone revaluation in Scotland for rating purposes.

Mr. Younger: No. This is not practicable. I have announced that there will be an extra increase of £38·5 million in the domestic element of the rate support grant, which will go a long way toward easing the burden revaluation will shift on to the domestic ratepayer.

40. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the burden of rates on domestic ratepayers in Scotland.

26. Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has undertaken a study of the impact of the rates revaluation on domestic properties in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: I understand that in Scotland as a whole the average revaluation multiplier for domestic property is 2·7, somewhat higher than the average for all property of 2·33. The recently announced extra increase of £38·5 million in the domestic element of the rate support grant will moderate the effect of this on householders' rate bills.

North Lanarkshire (Unemployment)

17. Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase in unemployment in North Lanarkshire since May 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On 10 January 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed persons claiming benefit in the former North Lanarkshire travel-to-work area totalled 32,635 while at 10 May 1979 there were 15,531 unemployed people in the same area registered for employment. The increase in unemployment cannot be calculated as the unemployment figures are not directly comparable because of the change in October 1982 to a claimant based count.

East Fife Regional Road

18. Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated completion date of phase 1 of the East Fife regional road and the projected completion date of phase 2.

Mr. Ancram: The estimated date of completion of phase 1 is August of this year. A 104-week contract has now been awarded for phase 2, and work is expected to start this month or next.

Deaconess and Bruntsfield Hospitals

19. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consult Lothian regional council before taking a decision on the Lothian health board's proposals for the closure of the Deaconess and Bruntsfield hospitals.

Mr. John MacKay: The regional council was consulted by Lothian health board on the board's statement of intent about the future of Bruntsfield, the Deaconess and the Royal Victoria hospitals. The range of views expressed during these consultations will be taken into account by my right hon. Friend in reaching a decision on the health board's proposals.

Hypothermia

20. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths from hypothermia have been recorded in Scottish hospitals during the current year to the last available date.

Mr. Younger: In the first seven weeks of 1985, 70 death certificates gave hypothermia as one of the causes of death in Scottish hospitals.

Livestock and Dairy Farming

21. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed the problems of the livestock and dairy sectors with the National Farmers Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: My right hon. and noble Friend attended the union's annual general meeting last week and had wide ranging discussions relating to these and other sectors of the industry.

Educational Provision

22. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Educational Institute of Scotland and parent-teachers associations about the standard of educational provision in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have received a number of representations from parent teacher associations about various questions of educational provision and about the effects of the current teachers' pay dispute in particular. I have had no direct representations from the Educational Institute of Scotland in recent months but the institute has of course made public reference to its views on the question of standards of provision.

Glasgow (Unemployment)

24. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of adult males unemployed in the Glasgow eastern area renewal area of Glasgow; and what percentage this represents.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Unemployment figures for the GEAR area of Glasgow are not available. However, at 10 January 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the estimated number of males claiming unemployment benefit in the post-code sectors wholly or partly contained within the GEAR area of Glasgow was 4,140.

Unemployment percentage rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. The GEAR area forms only a part of the wider Glasgow travel-to-work area where the unemployment rate at the same date was 17·7 per cent.

Education Expenditure

25. Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure per head of population on education in Scotland in the year 1984.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On educational services for which my right hon. Friend is responsible the provisional figure for 1983-84 was £306.

Science Parks

27. Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the role of science parks in Scotland in promoting the industries of the future; and what environment and management back-up he considers essential to their development.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Science parks are intended to facilitate the development and commercial exploitation of research carried out in universities. Their environment and management should be consistent with this objective.

Lothian Region (Unemployment)

28. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under the age of 25 years are presently without jobs in Lothian region.

Mr. Younger: On 10 January, the latest date for which information is available, there were 19,795 unemployed persons under the age of 25 years claiming benefit in Lothian region.

Teachers (Pay)

29. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in discussions with the teachers' unions to resolve the current dispute on teachers' pay.

30. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the dispute within Scottish schools.

39. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on teachers' pay in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mrs. McCurley).

Scottish Newspapers

31. Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet editors of Scottish newspapers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend meets editors of Scottish newspapers, either individually or collectively, from time to time, in the course of business, but he has at present no formal plans for future meetings.

36. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the future of the newspaper industry in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No representations have been received on the future of the newspaper industry in general, but concern has been expressed about the possible imposition of value added tax on newspapers in Scotland. This is, of course, a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and we have drawn these representations to his attention.

Public Inquiries

32. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the rules for the conduct of public inquiries in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: The rules for the conduct of public inquiries in Scotland are kept under review as a matter of routine and consideration is given to the need for amendments to them as and when experience of their operation suggests that this is required. We have no immediate plans for changes to the rules.

National Health Service (Expenditure)

34. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total spending on the National Health Service in Scotland in the current year, both in money terms and per head of population; and what change in real terms there has been in spending since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: Gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland in 1984-85 is expected to be £1,901 million. This represents some £369 per head of population. Detailed records of programme expenditure in volume terms are no longer maintained. The resources provided to the National Health Service in Scotland since 1979 have, however, been sufficient to enable services to expand by about 7 per cent. overall.

Liquor Licensing Laws

35. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will complete and publish his review of the liquor licensing laws introduced in 1976.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend's review of Scottish licensing law depends upon the result of the survey by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of public attitudes, for which the fieldwork has now been completed. We hope to publish preliminary key findings of that survey in June 1985. My right hon. Friend will make a statement on the outcome of the subsequent review once the necessary consideration and consultations have been undertaken, probably in the spring of 1986.

Manufacturing Industry

37. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the number of jobs lost in manufacturing industry since June 1979.

Mr. Younger: The number of employees in employment in manufacturing in Scotland is provisionally estimated to have fallen by 172,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis between June 1979 and September 1984.

Educational Institutes

38. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Educational Institutes of Scottish Teachers; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook). On both occasions the teaching unions' demand for an independent pay review and the Government's proposal of a review of pay and conditions of service within the existing negotiating machinery were discussed.

Domestic Rates

41. Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what the percentage increase in domestic rates in Scotland is now likely to be in 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: Around 17 per cent.

Farm Wardens

42. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farm wardens would need to be appointed in Scotland during a period of tension to meet his Department's food control plans.

Mr. John MacKay: About 900.

Local Authority Manpower

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 31 March of each of the years 1974 to 1984 together with the latest figures the number of local authority employees in Scotland, analysed by part-time/full-time within sex, covered by each of the items (i) to (v) in part III of his consultation document "Competition in the Provision of Local Authority Services"; and if he will reconcile these numbers with the published Joint Manpower Watch.

Mr. Younger: The detailed information requested is not held centrally.

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an estimate of jobs created in Scotland as a direct or indirect result of work done in the North sea oil and gas fields.

Mr. Younger: It is estimated that at mid-1984 between 91,000 and 107,000 jobs in Scotland were due directly or indirectly to North sea oil and gas activity.

Small Firms

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will write to the chief executives of all nationalised industries for which he is responsible asking them to pay their accounts to small firms more promptly.

Mr. Younger: I shall consider this in the light of the examination of possible ways of encouraging the prompt payment of bills, including a code of practice, being carried out by representatives of industry at the request of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps Her Majesty's Government takes to seek to encourage corporations in Scotland to pay their accounts to small firms more promptly.

Mr. Younger: The Government have published a booklet entitled "Delivering the Goods" which seeks to encourage better communications between large purchasers, including corporations, and their suppliers. The booklet highlights the problems faced by small firms when long credit periods are demanded of them.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry, has invited representatives of industry to examine possible ways of further encouraging prompt payment of bills, including a code of practice. I shall follow their deliberations with interest.

Motorail Depot, Glasgow

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, when he next meets the Chairman of British Rail (Scotland), he will raise the siting of a motorail depot in Glasgow or the surrounding district.

Mr. Younger: This is entirely a matter for the commercial judgment of British Rail which will, I am sure, take note of the right hon. Member's views.

Doctors

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of general practitioners per 1,000 population in the Glasgow region and the remaining health areas of Great Britain for the last 10 years.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of general medical practitioners, including assistants and trainees, per 1,000 population for Greater Glasgow health board and for the other health boards in Scotland for each year for the period requested are shown in the table. Details for England and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Social Services and Wales respectively.

Farms

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of farms in Scotland is in the ownership of conglomerates or finance houses as opposed to individual farmers or farming families.

Mr. John MacKay: Latest estimates incorporating returns made to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland by December 1984 suggest a total area owned by financial institutions of about 90,000 hectares, or 1½ per cent. of the total agricultural area. I regret that no information on the number of farms involved, or on ownership by other companies and institutions is available.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private woodlands foresters were employed by the Forestry Commission at district level in (a) April 1980 and (b) June 1984, after forest and district reorganisation; and how many will be employed in June 1985 after conservancy reorganisation.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 404]: Private woodlands work is carried out by the commission's forest district managers and their supporting staff. The allocation of staff resources at any time depends on the level of private woodlands activity. Some officers have been engaged full-time on this duty, but most have undertaken it as part of their overall duties. For this reason it is not possible to give a precise answer to the question. However, the commission's commitment in terms of man years to private woodlands work at forest district level has been assessed as follows:

ENERGY

Fast Breeder Reactor

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether negotiations are taking place with France to consider investment by Her Majesty's Government or the Central Electricity Generating Board in the construction of a European fast breeder reactor in France.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's replies of 16 January 1984, at column 47, to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) and of 22 February 1984, at column 552, to my right hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell).

As envisaged in the intergovernmental memorandum of understanding on fast reactor collaboration, the CEGB is currently negotiating with its partner utilities in Europe a general agreement setting out the principles of their future co-operation.

It is expected that these will include the possibility of cross-investment between the utilities in any demonstration fast reactors which may in due course be built under the collaboration in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom or Italy. Any definite proposal for such investment would be subject to a specific agreement, requiring the approval of respective Governments.

Electricity Imports (France)

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what would be the maximum amount of electricity that could be imported into the United Kingdom from France in a 24 hour period, using the cross-Channel electricity link, in volume and cash terms, at current prices;

(2) if he will list his powers to regulate the import of electricity from France;

(3) if it remains his policy that the intention of the cross-Channel electricity link is simply to iron out daily fluctuations in electricity demand in France and the United Kingdom;

(4) on what date the cross-Channel electricity link between the United Kingdom and France will come into operation.

Mr. Goodlad: I have no specific powers to regulate the import of electricity from France. The Central Electricity Generating Board and Electricité de France are responsible for the commercial operation of the link. I expect these bodies to make commercial agreements to obtain maximum benefit for both countries, taking account of prevailing circumstances. Once the Link is fully commissioned, the maximum amount of electricity that could be imported to the United Kingdom via the link is 48 Gigawatt hours in any 24-hour period. The cost of any imported energy is a commercial matter for the electricity utilities, but in terms of CEGB sales the current value of 48 GWh of imported energy would vary between £1 million and £1·2 million per day, depending on the time of year. The first part of the link is expected to become operational in the autumn of this year and the second half a year later.

Petroleum Production

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the Government's latest forecasts of the level of United Kingdom petroleum production.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The latest forecasts for United Kingdom petroleum production in the year 1985 to 1989 are as follows:

1985	120-135
1986	110-130
1987	95-125
1989	80-115

As in previous years, these forecasts represent a range of levels of possible petroleum production for each year. The ranges make allowance for the considerable technical and geological uncertainties which influence the rate of oil production from both mature and recently developed fields.

The figures comprise stabilised crude oil and natural gas liquids (NGLs). Production of the latter has built up rapidly in the last few years as follows:

	million tonnes of NGLs
1981	1·5
1982	2·9
1983	4·1
1984	*4·8

* (provisional).

NGLs are expected to account for some 5 million tonnes annually of total petroleum production in 1985 to 1989.

Total production in 1984 of stabilised crude and NGLs is estimated to have been 125·9 million tonnes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Extra-statutory Concessions

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on stamp duty on documents which assure group life and pension policies.

Mr. Moore: The concession was exercised about 120,000 times in 1983-84.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on additional stamp duty liable on replicas of documents which have been spoilt or lost.

Mr. Moore: The concession was exercised twice in 1983-84.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on stamp duty liable on lost documents.

Mr. Moore: The concession was exercised 414 times in 1983-84.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on relief in mergers under schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1980.

Mr. Moore: The concession is exercised about 10 times per year.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on stamp duty on cancelled policies of insurance.

Mr. Moore: The number of cancelled policies cannot be readily ascertained but approximately 2,000 periodical accounts are delivered each year as required by agreements under section 38 of the Finance Act 1956.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on areas of taxes arising through official error.

Mr. Moore: The concession was exercised about 13,000 times in 1983.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on changes of the accounting basis on the merger of professional firms.

Mr. Moore: The concession was exercised five times in 1983-84.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on income of contemplative religious communities or their members.

Mr. Moore: The concession is exercised about 75 times per year.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on bank interest received by charities;

(2) in which fiscal year the extra-satutory concession was introduced on income of contemplatory religious communities or their members;

(3) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on pensions to police officers or firemen;

(4) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on dependant relative allowance;

(5) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduces on businesses passing on the death of the trader;

(6) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on miners' free coal;

(7) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on inter-vivos gifts to charities where the claim to duty is not pursued against the charitable institution;

(8) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on funeral expenses set against estate duty liabilities;

(9) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on stamp duty liable on lost documents;

(10) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on stamp duty on documents which assure group life andpension policies;

(11) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on additional stamp duty liable on replicas of documents which have been spoilt or lost.

Mr. Moore: The information is not available in the form requested. However all of these concessions were introduced more than thirty years ago.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on relief for mortgage interest to residents of the Republic of Ireland;

(2) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on industrial building allowances for private roads on industrial trading estates;

(3) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on double taxation relief or income consisting of royalties or know-how payments;

(4) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on benefits received under a life, accident or sickness insurance policy;

(5) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on cessation of trade, profession or vocation;

(6) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on changes of the accounting basis on the merger of professional firms;

(7) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on capital allowances for agricultural buildings and houses;

(8) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on directors' fees received by partnerships or other companies;

(9) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on maintenance expenses of owner-occupier farms not carried out on a commercial basis;

(10) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on meal vouchers;

(11) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on retirement relief for directors of companies;

(12) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on capital gains tax exemptions to people who were absent from the United Kingdom for reasons of employment, overseas duties and conditions of employment;

(13) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on payments out of discretionary trust which are entitled to relief from the United Kingdom tax under provisions of an Income Tax or of double taxation agreement;

(14) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on relief under section 124 of the Capital Gains Tax Act on the sale of assets following cessation of trading;

(15) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced by the Inland Revenue on exemptions from capital gains tax for the matrimonial home of a separated couple;

(16) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on arrears of taxes arising through official error;

(17) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced to persons treated as residents in the United Kingdom who incur gains chargeable to capital gains tax either before their arrival or after their departure from the United Kingdom in that financial year;

(18) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on property liable on ceasing of an annuity;

(19) which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on property held by personal representatives for benefit of individuals under a will are entitled to proceeds of a house absolutely or for life;

(20) in which year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on relief under section 125 of the Capital Gains Act on assets sold in anticipation of liquidation;

(21) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on stamp duty repaid on cancelled policies of insurance.

Mr. Moore: The information is not available in the form requested. Details of extra-statutory concessions in operation were reported in the annual reports of the Board of Inland Revenue between 1950 and 1966 but since 1966 they have been included in the Inland Revenue booklet IR1 and annual supplements. The following concessions were published in the booklets and supplements for the years shown:

relief for mortgage interest to residents of the Republic of Ireland	1978 industrial building allowances for private roads on industrial trading estates	1966
double taxation relief on income consisting of royalties and "know how" payments	1966 benefits received under a life, accident or sickness insurance policy	1976
cessation of trade, profession or vocation	1972
change of the accounting basis on the merger of professional firms	1971
capital allowances for agricultural buildings and works	1966
directors' fees received by partnerships and other companies	1980 maintenance expenses of owner-occupied farms not carried on on a commercial basis	1966 meal vouchers	1966
retirement relief: directors of groups of companies	1966
private residence exemption from capital gains tax	1971 and 1976
payments out of a discretionary trust: entitlement to relief from United Kingdom tax under the provisions of the Income Tax Acts or of a double taxation agreement	1978
retirement relief: sale of assets following cessation of trading, Section 124 Capital Gains Tax Act	1982
private residence exemption: separated couples, capital gains tax	1974
arrears of tax arising through official error	1971
residence in the United Kingdom: year of commencement or cessation of residence, capital gains tax	1966
property chargeable on the ceasing of an annuity	1980
private residence exemption: property held by personal representatives	1966 and 1972
retirement relief: sale of assets in anticipation of liquidation, Section 125 Capital Gains Tax Act	1982
repayment of stamp duty on cancelled policies of insurance	1980

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on relief under section 125 of Capital Gains Act on assets sold in anticipation of liquidation;

(2) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on retirement relief for directors of companies;

(3) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on capital gains tax exemptions to people who were absent from the United Kingdom for reasons of employment, overseas duties and conditions of employment;

(4) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on payments out of discretionary trust which are entitled to relief from United Kingdom tax under provisions of Income Tax Acts or of double taxation agreement;

(5) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on relief under section 124 of the Capital Gains Tax Act on the sale of assets following cessation of trading;

(6) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on inter-vivos gifts to charities where the claim to duty is not pursued against the charitable institution;

(7) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on funeral expenses set against estate duty liabilities;

(8) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised by the Inland Revenue on exemptions from capital gains tax for the matrimonial home of a separated couple;

(9) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on property liable on ceasing of an annuity;

(10) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised to persons treated as residents in the United Kingdom who incur gains chargeable to capital gains tax either before their arrival or after their departure from the United Kingdom in that financial year;

(11) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on cessation of trade, profession or vocation;

(12) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on benefits received under a life, accident or sickness insurance policy;

(13) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on double taxation relief on income consisting of royalties and know-how payments;

(14) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on industrial building allowances for private roads on industrial trading estates;

(15) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on capital allowances for agricultural buildings and works;

(16) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on directors fees received by partnerships and other companies;

(17) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on relief for mortgage interest to residents of the Republic of Ireland;

(18) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on maintenance expenses of owner-occupied farms not carried on on a commercial basis;

(19) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on bank interest received by charities;

(20) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on pensions to police officers and firemen;

(21) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on dependent relative allowance;

(22) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on businesses passing on the death of the trader;

(23) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on property held by personnel representatives for benefit of individuals who under a will are entitled to proceeds of a house absolutely or for life.

Mr. Moore: I regret that data are not available centrally on which to base reliable estimates.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent research he has conducted on the effect of charges in the rate and scope of value added tax on demand in the economy.

Mr. Hayhoe: The evolution of money demand in the economy is essentially determined by the Government's macro-economic policies and the effects on demand of changing VAT within this framework will be temporary.

Customs Duties

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide particulars of the collection of customs duties for the years 1981 to 1984, distinguishing between food, beverages, manufactures and other goods; and if he will add for 1984 the amounts collected in agricultural levies, sugar and isoglucose levies, value added tax contributions to the European Economic Community budget and any other levies.

Mr. Hayhoe: For customs duties, the information grouped by the standard international trade classification (rev. 2) is as follows:

Description	SITC (rev. 2) section	1981	1982	1983	*1984
Food	0;4	156·4	170·5	176·8	203·0

The amounts of agricultural levies and sugar and isoglucose levies collected in 1984, together with the value added tax contributions to the European Economic Community Budgets for the same year, are shown below.

	£ million
Agricultural levies	152·6
Sugar and isoglucose levies	50·3
Value added tax	1,665·4

PAYE

Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what degree of change in the personal income tax structure can now be assimilated by the pay-as-you-earn computers; and when computerisation of pay-as-you-earn will be substantially complete.

Mr. Moore: The pay-as-you-earn computer system was designed so that it could be adapted to changes in the personal income tax structure. It is planned to complete the transfer of work to this system across the country three years from now.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984, of the programme of action on women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is to be used to monitor such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working. Positive action includes encouraging women to pursue training through the use of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women only, as well as non-residential management courses.

House of Commons (Printing and Distribution Costs)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the costs for 1983-84, and the estimated costs for 1984-85 and 1985-86, for printing for the House, including the production and distribution costs of parliamentary debates.

Mr. Hayhoe: Her Majesty's Stationery Office distribution costs are not directly attributable to particular publications, except for the cost of the special arrangements for early morning postal deliveries of parliamentary debates to Members' private addresses in London. Subject to that, the information is as follows:

	1983-84 Actual £000	1984-85 Estimated £000	1985-86 Estimated £000
Reports of Debates	5,574	4,956	5,162
Other HMSO Publications for Parliament	5,038	7,035	6,800
General Printing	1,180	1,324	1,450
Total	11,792	13,315	13,412

With the exception of general printing, these costs are partly offset by revenue from sales by Her Majesty's Stationery Office to customers other than Parliament. The production costs of reports of debates are also partly met by a subsidy paid to the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office from class XIII, vote 21.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Dubs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on his exchange rate policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have received several such communications.

Money Supply

Mr Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the rates of growth in the United Kingdom money supply, as measured by MO, M1, M3 and £M3, in the years 1979 to 1984; and what information he has as to the equivalent or nearest equivalent figures for the United States of America, Japan, Germany and Australia, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1985, c. 641]: The information requested for the UK appears in "Financial Statistics." Monetary data for other countries are published in the IMF's "International Financial Statistics." For the narrow aggregates the IMF series nearest in concept to those of the UK are "Reserve Money" (for MO) and "Money" (for M1). For broad money the sum of the IMF's series for "Money" and "Quasi-Money" —which includes residents' foreign currency deposits— can be regarded as an approximation for M3. For other countries there is no readily available equivalent to £M3.

Government Borrowing and Expenditure

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total Government borrowing requirement and the total of central Government spending for each year since 1979; what proportion this represented of gross domestic product; and what information he has as to how these figures compare with those for the United States of America, Japan, Germany and Australia, respectively.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1985, c. 640]: The general Government borrowing requirement in cash and as a percentage of GDP are for the UK in financial years from 1979:

	Cash GGBR (£ million)	Ratio GGBR/ GDP per cent.
1979-80	10,436	5·04
1980-81	13,586	5·76
1981-82	8,585	3·31
1982-83	10,104	3·56
1983-84	10,086	3·30

Owing to differences in structure and definition of Government accounts, international comparisons of borrowing requirements are not easily made. Comparisons of general Government financial balances are less problematic but should still be made with caution. The table shows the latest outturns for these balances as a percentage of GDP published by the OECD.

General Government Financial Balance as a percentage of GDP

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
United Kingdom	−3·2	−3·8	−3·1	−2·4	−3·3
*USA	+0·6	−1·2	−0·9	−3·8	−4·1
*Japan	−4·8	−4·5	−4·0	−3·4	−3·3

* as a percentage of GNP

Central Government expenditure in cash and as a percentage of GDP for financial years from 1979 are:

	Expenditure (£ million)	As a percentage of GDP
1979-80	52,429	25·3
1980-81	63,652	27·0
1981-82	73,233	28·2
1982-83	81,497	28·7
1983-84	85,389	27·9

The expenditure figures are from the recent expenditure White Paper (Cmnd 9428 Table 2.3) and they exclude finance for nationalised industries and public corporations. The following table gives a comparison of central Government expenditure as a percentage of GDP on internationally standardised definitions. Nevertheless, the figures should be treated with caution since differences in national accounting systems make it difficult to calculate exactly comparable statistics.

The major reason that the UK percentages are higher than the percentages given in the above table is that OECD definition includes debt interest. The proportion of general Government (central and local) expenditure borne by central Government is much higher in the UK than in countries with a federal structure (eg USA, Germany).

Departmental Salaries

Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the years 1974 to 1984 (a) the salary in real terms of (i) principals and (ii) assistant secretaries in his Department, expressed as a percentage of the 1974 base salary level and (b) the number of voluntary resignations.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 60]: For the principal and assistant secretary grades, salaries in real terms expressed as percentages of 1974 salaries for each of the years 1974 to 1984 are shown in the following table. The salaries used correspond to the maxima of the respective pay scales and in 1984 these were, in actual terms, £17,489 for the principal grade and £24,317 for the assistant secretary grade. The final two columns of the table list the numbers of resignations from these grades in Her Majesty's Treasury since 1975.

	Assistant Secretary	Principal	Assistant Secretary	Principal
1974	100	100	..	..
1975	111	104	2	—
1976	95	93	—	3
1977	84	82	1	1
1978	85	83	—	—
1979	81	80	—	3

1984	94	93	..	7

Base Rate

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average base rate for each quarter from 1979 onwards; and what real rate of interest this represented in each case; and how these figures compare with those for the United States, Japan, Germany and Australia.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 60]: Quarterly data for average United Kingdom base rates appear in "Financial Statistics." Interest rates relevant to bank lending in other countries are published in the OECD's "Financial Statistics Monthly." Since the structure of bank lending varies between countries, there is no guarantee that these interest rates are comparable with United Kingdom base rates.

For Australia and Germany the rates published by the OECD are average rates on particular categories of bank lending. For the United States and Japan they are reference rates similar in concept to United Kingdom bank rate, that is rates which serve as the basis for the pricing structure of bank loans in that country. Even among the latter group, comparison may be complicated by significant differences with regard to both the average maturity of bank lending and the size of the mark-up over the reference rate on the average loan.

Many problems arise in converting data for nominal interest rates into a measure of real interest rates. Some of the issues involved were discussed in an article in the December 1983 Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin, which also presented estimates for a number of countries.

Nationalised Industries (Legislation)

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 11 February, Official Report, column 62, if he will place in the Library copies of comments received on his consultation paper on nationalised industries legislation.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1985, c. 129]: In line with usual practice, I do not consider it appropriate to place these comments in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

H. J. McDonald

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many (a) repair grants and (b) improvement grants have been paid by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to H. J. McDonald at the latest available date;

(2) how many (a) repair grant applications and (b) improvement grant applications have been received by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive from H. J. McDonald at the latest date.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that up to 28 February 1985 240 improvement grant applications have been made to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive by Mr. McDonald, of which 137 have been completed and paid. No applications for repair grants have been made.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been paid in (a) repair grants and (b) improvement grants to H. J. McDonald by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at the latest available date.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I understand from the Chairman that the amounts paid out to Mr. McDonald up to 28 February 1985 are:

Repairs Grants	Nil
Improvement Grants	1,171,977
Total	1,171,977

Ards (Roads and Footways)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to empower Ards borough council to repair pot-holes on public roads and footways within the Ards district area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. The Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 already empowers district councils to carry out functions on an agency basis. If there were general support for developments along these lines I would be prepared to give consideration to them.

Container Facilities

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department proposes to take to enable the improvement of container facilities for exporters of goods manufactured in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: Responsibility for the provision of facilities for the handling of containerised goods traffic through Northern Ireland commercial ports rests with the individual port authorities and the stevedoring companies. Grant assistance towards the provision of such facilities is available under the Department of Economic Development's port modernisation grant scheme.

Exporters (Assistance)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance he gives to facilitate the activities of exporters in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: The industrial Development Board provides a wide range of assistance to exporting companies in Northern Ireland. This includes the provision of market intelligence, the organisation and sponsorship of trade missions, the organisation and sponsorship of Northern Ireland participation at trade fairs, and the provision of specialist marketing advice. The market research grant scheme provides generous financial support to encourage local companies to investigate export potential overseas. Additionally the export services of the British Overseas Trade Board are available to Northern Ireland companies through the Industrial Development Board which functions as a regional office of BOTB.

Manufacturing Companies (Railway Sidings)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to introduce a scheme akin to British Rail's speed-link system, whereby manufacturing companies are encouraged to build a railway siding adjacent to their premises in conjunction with Northern Ireland Railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1985, c. 125]: I have no such plans.

THE ARTS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what arrangements are in hand to ensure that the Office of Arts and Libraries complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984, the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service".

Mr. Waldegrave: Equal opportunities policy within the Office of Arts and Libraries follows that for the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) and so I refer the Hon. Member to the answer given on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Civil Service on 12 March at column 124.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutes

Mr. White asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) if he will list those statutes which require the Secretary of State to bring them into operation by order made by statutory instrument for each year since 1955.

(2) if he will list those statutes which have come into operation after a specified period for each year since 1955;

(3) if he will list those statutes which have still to be brought into operation.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Agricultural Price Settlement (Debates)

Mr. Spearing asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will set out in the Official Report the length of each debate on the annual agricultural price settlement of the European Economic Community for each of the years 1980 to 1984.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is as follows:

1980—20 March—7 hours 40 minutes
1981—26 March—5 hours 45 minutes
1982—24 March—6 hours 13 minutes
1983— 3 March—3 hours 22 minutes
1984—22 March—3 hours 17 minutes

Note: These figures include the time spent on Divisions.

Sittings of the House

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will estimate the marginal cost for each hour the House sits after (i) midnight, (ii) 1 am and (iii) 2 am, including the cost of staff, heating and lighting, and support services.

Mr. Biffen: I refer my hon. Friend to written answers given by the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), representing the House of Commons Commission, on 1 May 1984, at column 120, and by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 25 April 1984, at column 526. A detailed estimate in the terms requested could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Line of Route

Mr. Golding asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will make arrangements to reverse the line of route for visitors, to start it in Westminster Hall and to increase staff involved in security clearance; and if he will take such other steps as are necessary to improve the arrangements for visitors to the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: In the course of this Session the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee will be reviewing the arrangements for Members' parties visiting the Palace of Westminster. I shall draw the hon. Member's question to the attention of the Sub-Committee.

WALES

Assisted Places Scheme

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount of money spent by each county council in Wales for assisted places in independent schools for the last four years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Details of payments made by authorities for pupils at independent schools is not collected centrally.

Thoracic Surgery

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the adequacy of services in South Wales for thoracic surgery, including surgery for patients with lung cancer.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Thoracic surgery services are located at Llandough hospital, Cardiff. They are being expanded and an additional £50,000 of recurring revenue is being made available to South Glamorgan district health authority to cover the extra costs.

Computerised Tomography Scanning

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the provision of computerised tomography scanning in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is my intention to make CT scanning readily accessible to patients in Wales. The Department is currently considering a strategy for the phasing of CT scanners to district in Wales which have suitable general hospital accommodation and for making financial assistance available from central sources.

Endoscopy Equipment

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the provision of endoscopy equipment for diagnosing cancer in patients in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I recognise the importance of having such facilities available throughout Wales and we have set aside some £600,000 for the purchase of endoscopy equipment for the new district general hospitals at Bridgend, Wrexham and Morriston.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of full-time police officers in drug squads in each police force area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As at 1 January 1985 a total of 630 officers were employed full-time in drug squads in police forces in England and Wales as follows:

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the treatment of psychological or physiological imbalances as an alternative to prison sentence or as a means of securing early release from prison for convicted sex offenders.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is the practice for prison staff to examine and read letters which prisoners have sent to, or received from (a) hon. Members of Parliament, (b) solicitors, (c) probation officers and (d) social workers.

Mr. Mellor: Correspondence between prisoners and Members of Parliament, probation officers and social workers is examined and read by staff in accordance with Standing Order 5, which is published and a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Correspondence with solicitors is examined and read unless it is about legal proceedings to which the prisoner is a party, in which case, in accordance with prison rule 37A(1), it may be examined but may not be read, unless the governor has reason to suppose that it contains matter not related to the proceedings.

Motorway Speeding

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further modern technology resources he intends to allocate to police departments to enable them to detect more motorway speeding offences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is for chief officers of police and their police authorities to decide what resources they should allocate to motorway policing. Advice to police forces on speed detection technology is available from scientists in the Department.

Coroners

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to introduce legislation to reform the coroners service in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: We have no immediate plans for legislation to reform the coroners' service, but we will keep the matter under review.

Firearms

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list, by police authority area, the number of current firearms certificates with territorial conditions applicable;

(2) if he will list, by police authority area, the number of current open firearms certificates.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disporportionate cost.

Prisoners (Release on Licence)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving life sentences for (a) murder of police or prison officers, (b) murders by shooting in the furtherance of theft, (c) sexual or sadistic murders of children and (d) terrorist murders, were considered for release on licence between January to June 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

	1983	1984
(a)	Nil	Nil
(b)	Nil	Nil
(c)	8	3
(d)	Nil	Nil

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving life sentences for (a) murder of police or prison officers, (b) murders by shooting in the furtherance of theft, (c) sexual or sadistic murders of children and (d) terrorist murders, were granted release on licence between January to June 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

	1983	1984
(a)	Nil	Nil
(b)	1	Nil
(c)	Nil	Nil
(d)	Nil	Nil

Because of the need for life sentence prisoners to spend a period on the pre-release employment scheme and possibly also at an open prison before release, their cases will normally have been considered by the Parole Board at least 12 months before their release dates.

Manchester University (Incident)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an independent inquiry into the actions of the police in connection with the meeting addressed by himself at Manchester university on 1 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of the Greater Manchester police has sent my right hon. and learned Friend a preliminary report on the incident at Manchester university on 1 March and has asked the deputy chief constable of the Avon and Somerset constabulary to review the policing arrangements made for his visit and to investigate and report on any complaints against any police officer arising from police action during the visit. All complaints received in connection with the incident will be recorded and investigated in accordance with section 49 of the Police Act 1964, and will be referred in due course to the Director of Public Prosecutions — where appropriate—and to the Police Complaints Board.

We are satisfied that there is no need for any further form of inquiry.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of his hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), of 11 February, Official Report, column 14, whether the register of applications to the board of visitors at Winson Green prison contains a reference to his noble Friend Lord Elton in relation to an application from an unsentenced prisoner who had been segregated from other prisoners in November 1984; and why his hon. Friend had previously stated that there was no reference to his noble Friend in any of the records pertaining to the segregation of any unsentenced prisoners at Winson Green prison.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend wrote to the hon. Member on 7 March.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Robin Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to figures published in annexe 2 to Cmnd. 9438 on the number of warrants issued to intercept telecommunications and letters, which Secretaries of State, other than those referred to in paragraph 10 of Cmnd. 9438, are authorised to sign such warrants; and for each year since 1980, how many such warrants have been authorised by individual Departments.

Mr. Brittan: No Secretaries of State other than those referred to in paragraph 10 of Cmnd. 9438 are responsible for the issue of warrants, though it remains the case, as was stated in paragraph 2 of Cmnd. 7873 of April 1980, that if the regular Secretary of State is ill or absent, the power may be exercised on his behalf by another Secretary of State, but this happens comparatively seldom. I do not intend to add to the figures given in annexe 2 to Cmnd. 9438.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Service Manpower

Q42. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister if she will compare the reduction in Civil Service manpower with that achieved in local authorities since 1979 in percentage terms.

The Prime Minister: Between mid-1979 and mid-1984, in terms of full-time equivalent staff, employment by local authorities fell by 4 per cent. and employment in the Civil Service (excluding the Northern Ireland Civil Service) fell by 14 per cent.

Coal Industry

Q61. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister what is the latest estimate of the cost of the coal mining dispute over the past 12 months.

The Prime Minister: To the beginning of this year the strike was estimated to have added about £1½ billion to the public sector borrowing requirement in 1984-85. When the Chancellor presents his Budget he will be in a position to give a more up-to-date estimate.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Q64. Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister what information Her Majesty's Government have concerning the rationale behind the United States Government's strategic defence initiative.

The Prime Minister: The present position is set out in the four points President Reagan and I agreed at Camp David in December and reaffirmed in Washington last month. The US strategic defence initiative, which is a research programme permitted under existing US-Soviet agreements, is clearly necessary in order to balance Soviet efforts.

Job Opportunities (Travel Assistance)

Q99. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the action the Government are taking to help and encourage people taking up job opportunities in locations which are a considerable distance from their home.

The Prime Minister: The Government have taken action in a number of areas. In the case of housing a number of changes have been made designed wholly or in part to promote mobility. For example we have extended the right to buy and have eased restrictions on private lettings. We have also introduced low cost home ownership initiatives which assist mobility by enabling public sector tenants to buy a home in a new area and by helping owner occupiers to overcome differences in house prices between regions. In the public sector the Government have set up the national mobility scheme and has given secure tenants a statutory right to exchange homes. These measures have made it easier for council tenants to move from one area to another.

The Government have also maintained arrangements, through the Manpower Services Commission's employment transfer and job search schemes, to help fill vacancies for which employers cannot find suitable workers locally, by providing grants to unemployed people to move home to take such jobs or to look for work in other areas. Similar help is also available in certain circumstances to recipients of supplementary benefit from the Department of Health and Social Security.

Through the increasing use of modern technology, the public employment service is becoming better able to circulate details of job opportunities, and particularly vacancies which are hard to fill locally, to jobcentres in other parts of the country.

Engagements

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 March.

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will list her official engagements for 14 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 March.

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 March.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 March.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 March.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 14 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will be having further meetings later today including one with President Mubarak of Egypt.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

RAF Molesworth (CND Campaign)

Mr. Leigh asked the Attorney-General if he will take steps to prosecute the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament for conspiracy to trespass on Ministry of Defence land at RAF Molesworth in connection with the operation of its pledge scheme.

The Attorney-General: The Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament cannot itself be the subject of criminal proceedings although the conduct of individual members may render them liable to prosecution. Trespass on Ministry of Defence land at RAF Molesworth per se does not at present constitute a criminal offence but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has advertised his intention to exercise his powers under part II of the Military Lands Act 1892 and other powers to make bye-laws covering such conduct. By virtue of section 1 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 an agreement between two or more persons to pursue a course of conduct which would necessarily amount to or involve the commission of any offence or offences against those bye-laws could constitute a criminal conspiracy. However, support for the objects of CND by participation in the pledge scheme does not necessarily imply such an agreement and accordingly I do not intend to institute criminal proceedings in respect of its operation.

ENERGY

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the implications for its relationship with the Department of placing the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on a trading fund basis from 1 April 1986.

Mr. Goodlad: The authority's work for the Department will be put on a customer-contractor basis. But the nature of the contractual relationship will vary from area to area and the authority will remain an important source of advice on the programmes it executes for the Department, as well as being one of a number of sources of advice available to the Government on nuclear issues generally. No unnecessary apparatus will be built up in the Department to duplicate the resources of the authority.

Cross-Channel Electricity Link

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the cross-Channel electricity link between France and Britain to come into operation; how much it will cost; what was the British share; what will be the estimated maintenance costs and how they will be divided; what are the main points of the agreement made on its use by the two national generating boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The first half of the link is expected to be commissioned in autumn this year followed by the second half one year later. The cost of the link is being shared in broadly equal proportions by the Central Electricity Generating Board and by Electricité de France. The CEGB's share is estimated at £330 million. Each utility will be responsible for the maintenance of its own terminal equipment and cable. The costs, which are expected to be low, will be divided accordingly.

The use of the link is governed by a protocol agreement signed by the two utilities in June 1981 which provides for the drawing up of specific commercial agreements from time to time.

Coal Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the miners dismissed by the Coal Board in (a) Scotland and (b) the rest of Britain; what is the alleged misconduct for which they have been dismissed, listing in each case the criminal offence of which the miner has been found guilty and the fine imposed by the courts; whether it is a first offence; how many years of service each employee dismissed has given to the coal industry; and what redundancy payment he might have expected if he had applied for redundancy and not been dismissed.

Mr. David Hunt: The dismissal and re-employment of their employees are matters for the National Coal Board. The Board have made it clear that all cases will be considered on their merits. If any person considers that he has been unfairly dismissed he has the right to take his case to an industrial tribunal.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total cost to the Exchequer of student maintenance grants in each year since 1970 expressed in the following ways (a) cost terms, (b) indexed, using 1979 as 100 (real terms), (c) including fees and (d) real terms (cash).

Mr. Brooke: The total cost to the Exchequer of student maintenance grants and fees since the 1976-77 financial year expressed in cash terms, cost terms and indexed using 1979 as 100 is as follows:

(£m Financial years)

	1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84

Pupils (Statistics)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each of the last four years (a) the average cost of education per pupil, (b) the percentage of school leavers with two or more A-levels, (c) the percentage of school leavers with five or more O-levels for (i) the Inner London education authority, (ii) the metropolitan districts, (iii) the shire counties and (iv) England.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

	ILEA	Metropolitan* Districts	Shire Counties	England

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the national criteria for the General Certificate of Secondary Education; what steps he is taking to ensure that teachers and others directly concerned are fully informed about the new system of examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office are today publishing the first edition of the national criteria for the general certificate of secondary education, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have approved.

The national criteria provide a nationally agreed framework for the GCSE. All GCSE syllabuses and examinations will be based on these criteria, and the Secondary Examinations Council will use them as a basis for monitoring the new examination syllabuses. They consist of general criteria and subject-specific criteria. The general criteria set out the main principles which are to govern all GCSE syllabuses and examinations together with ground rules for the conduct of the examinations. The 20 subject-specific criteria statements will provide the basis for all GCSE syllabuses and examinations in the subject areas concerned, which between them account for the great majority of subject entries in the existing examinations.

My right hon. Friend and I see publication of the national criteria as an historic step. For the first time, the partners in the education service have pooled their wisdom and experience in order to produce nationally agreed statements on course objectives, content and assessment methods for all the subject areas most commonly examined in the final years of compulsory schooling.

The national criteria have been prepared in draft by the Joint Council of GCE and CSE Boards. The texts incorporate many points made, during extended consultations, by schools and colleges, teachers' associations, subject associations, higher education, employers' organisations, the local authority associations, the Secondary Examinations Council and others, including ourselves, and accepted by the Joint Council. We are most grateful to the Joint Council, the Secondary Examinations Council and all the others who have contributed to preparation of the criteria.

The national criteria as now published do not make provision for criteria-related grading. The Secondary Examinations Council has however already embarked on the preparation of grade criteria for this purpose. These will be circulated in draft for consultation and then added to the national criteria, subject by subject, as soon as practicable. The national criteria will also be reviewed and updated regularly, as provided in the general criteria.

The Department and the Welsh Office are also publishing today a general introduction to the GCSE. This describes the main features of the new examination system, the underlying objectives and the policy context. It brings together in one consolidated statement the substance of all previous Government announcements on the GCSE. It is intended as a convenient source of reference for all who are professionally concerned with the new examinations, including the GCSE examining groups, teachers, local education authorities and employers.

Copies of both the national criteria and the general introduction are being placed in the Library. Copies are also being sent to all secondary schools and colleges, local education authorities, examining boards, employers' organisations and others concerned.

DEFENCE

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he hopes to complete his review of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947

Mr. Lee: The review of section 10 is continuing but I am as yet unable to say when it will be completed.

County Regiments of Infantry

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to revise the present system of county regiments of infantry with local recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are no plans to revise the present system of recruitment to county infantry regiments. Applicants to the infantry are allowed to apply for three regiments and are counselled by recruiting staff when making their choice. Final acceptance to a regiment is dependent upon a number of factors including: the candidate's abilities; the vacancy state in the regiment of the candidate's choice; the needs of the service.

Schools

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many private schools and how many state schools receive grants from his Department for the purchase of military equipment; if he will itemise the equipment and name the schools; and whether his Department also pays travelling allowances to pupils at these schools taking part in training exercises and camps both in the United Kingdom and overseas.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

St. Patrick's Barracks, Ballymena

Sir Antony Buck asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is now in a position to make a statement on the future of St. Patrick's barracks at Ballymena.

Mr. Lee: Yes. Following the review of army training carried out by General Groom we have decided that adult training for the Royal Irish Rangers, together with certain Territorial Army and other reserve activities will continue at St. Patrick's barracks, Ballymena. However, junior soldiers of the regiment will in future be trained at Ouston, Northumberland with their junior leaders and the juniors of certain other Regiments. We are also examining ways in which the accommodation at St. Patrick's released by the move of the juniors might be utilised for other military purposes, possibly by the TA. Overall, the reorganisation of junior training is expected to achieve civilian manpower savings of about 100, release significant numbers of military personnel to more operational duties and produce capital savings of about £8 million.

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Speed Limits)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase speed limits from 70 to 80 miles per hour.

Mrs. Chalker: The Transport Committee in its report on road safety recommended that the motorway speed limit should be raised to 80 mph for a trial period. I shall give my views on this particular recommendation, when I respond to its report as a whole, which I shall be doing as soon as possible.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service".

Mr. Ridley: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working. Women are being encouraged to attend courses (particularly developmental courses) and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available. Use is being made of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women only and we are considering how best to incorporate such courses into our own Departmental training programme.

Road Accident Statistics

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of accidents involving death or serious injury on each motorway, expressed as a percentage of the length of the motorways.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Roads

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the comparative levels of expenditure upon new road construction in the United Kingdom, in each of the other member countries of the European Economic Community, the United States of America and Canada, both as a total sterling equivalent and a percentage of gross national product; and what total new mileage of roads this figure represented in each of those countries in the latest year for which figures are available both in absolute terms and as a percentage of existing road mileage.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that the information requested is not available. Accurate figures for the size of the road network and details of road mileages completed annually are available only for the United Kingdom national road system. The Department does not keep any information on other countries' road programmes. If my hon. Friend wishes to raise a particular point, perhaps he would write to me.

Missing Vessels

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply of 5 March to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, he will give details of compensation paid to the owners of the ships and relatives of men missing in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell: No details are available to my Department since it does not pay compensation in such cases and there is no requirement for it to do so.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of small companies who participated in British Overseas Trade Board overseas trade fairs in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: Annual details of the size of companies which have used the British Overseas Trade Board's schemes of support at overseas trade fairs are not known. But an independent consultants's survey in 1983 established that overall about 60 per cent. of the exhibitors who have used these schemes have less than 100 employees. An internal study in 1984 showed that about 70 per cent. have 200 employees or less.

Statistics about the number of occasions on which particular companies have exhibited at each particular trade fair where there is a BOTB group have been kept only since 1981. The pattern of first-time exhibitors has been as follows:

	Number
1981	3,350
1982	3,737
1984	3,193

There is no reason to suppose that the pattern was different before 1981 or that the proportion of small companies among the newcomers is less than the overall proportion of small companies in BOTB assisted groups of exhibitors.

Scrap Metal

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the increase in the price of scrap; if he has made any estimate of or has any information about the impact of this on the United Kingdom foundry industry; by how much the price has risen in each quarter since 1982; and what powers he has to introduce a system of export licences.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the full figures for the United Kingdom's exports and imports of textile and clothing products for 1984 and the figures indicating the utilisation of multi-fibre arrangement quotas in 1984 will be available.

Mr. Channon: Detailed trade figures for 1984 have been published in the December 1984 issue of the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the House of Commons Library. It is expected that 1984 figures for "Overseas trade analysed in terms of industries" will be published in the "Business Monitor MQ10", which is also received by the Library, by the end of April. This gives an analysis of exports and imports classified according to the industries of which they are principal products — and is used, for example, to measure import penetration. Final licensing statistics relating to the utilisation of multi-fibre arrangement quotas for 1984 will also be known at the end of April.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which multi-fibre arrangement quotas for the United Kingdom in 1983 met the conditions laid down in paragraph 2 of article 5 of the European Community Council Regulation No.3 589/82 of 23 December 1982, which govern the use of the anti-surge mechanism.

Mr. Channon The MFA quotas — within MFA Group 1, to which Article 5 applies — which in 1983 represented more than 2·5 per cent. of total Community imports in 1980 for that category — more than 1 per cent. in the case of Hong Kong, Macao and South Korea —and in which imports in 1983 represented more than 50 per cent. of the quota in question, were as follows:

Political Donations

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government have imposed any conditions in relation to donations to political parties on those companies which have been sold from the public sector since 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: No. These companies are subject to the same requirements as any other companies registered under the Companies Acts.

Trade (Departmental Promotion)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the successes of his Department in stimulating increased trade and, in particular, exports in the north-west of England during 1984.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Business Start-ups (Statistics)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his practice to compile statistical records of business start-ups based upon income tax and corporation tax returns rather than value added tax returns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I shall have to consult the appropriate authorities, the Inland Revenue, about the practicability of my hon. Friend's suggestion and will write to him in due course.

United States (High Technology Exports)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will obtain and place in the Library a copy of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report prepared for that organisation by Dr.

Stuart Macdonald entitled "The Sisyphus Syndrome — Implications of US Controls of High Technology Exports"; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the complete range of tourism services provided within the countries of the European Economic Community which attract value added tax together with the individual percentage rates curently being levied.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have been asked to reply.

The percentage rates of value added tax applying to the main areas of tourist expenditure in EC member states are understood to be as set out in the following table. Greece has not yet introduced a value added tax.

EMPLOYMENT

Pay Increases

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage increase in pay since 1979 to the latest available date of (a) male manual workers and (b) male non-manual workers, and the same for females.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: According to the "New Earnings Survey", the percentage increases in average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees working a full week between April 1979 and April 1984 have been as follows:

	Percentage
Males
Manual occupations	66·5
Non-manual occupations	87·9
Females
Manual occupations	69·0
Non-manual occupations	86·7

Changes in average earnings will reflect changes in the composition of employment and do not necessarily imply corresponding changes in rates of pay for comparable jobs.

Earnings

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the movement of the percentage of the median of the top decile and top quartile of male earnings since 1979 and the bottom decile and quartile.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The requested details, in terms of gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees working a full week, are published in table 30 of "New Earnings Survey 1984", part B, a copy of which is in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the number of people in part-time employment in the month of January for the years 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985;

(2) if he will list the number of people in full-time employment in the month of January for the years 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 18 February 1985 at column 348.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of people known to be self-employed in the month of January for the years 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of the number of self-employed people in Great Britain are only available quarterly from March 1965. The following table gives the information for March 1965, March 1970, March 1975, March 1980 and September 1984, the latest available date.

Self-employed persons—Great Britain

	Number
March 1965	1,620,000
March 1970	1,820,000
March 1975	1,934,000
March 1980	1,923,000
September 1984	2,465,000

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current percentage of unemployment in Cambridgeshire; and how this figure compares with (a) Northern Ireland, (b) development areas, (c) intermediate areas and (d) non-assisted areas.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the information, which is available in the Library, for 10 January 1985.

	Unemployment rate per cent
Cambridgeshire	10·2
Northern Ireland	21·2
Development Areas (Great Britain)	20·2
Intermediate Areas (Great Britain)	16·3

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers in the following age categories (a) 16 to 18-year-olds, (b) 18 to 25-year-olds, (c) 25 to 50-year-olds and (d) those over 50 years of age who were: (i) registered as unemployed and (ii) on a government training scheme in (1) Scotland and (2) the United Kingdom at the latest available date and on the equivalent date in each of the last six years.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 362]: The available information on unemployment is shown in the following table. Separate information for those aged under 50 or 50 or over is not available for all the dates shown. I regret that, with the exception of the youth training scheme, the information as requested by age group is not available for Government training schemes.

At the end of January 1985, 34,117 young people were on the youth training scheme in Scotland who had entered the scheme when aged under 18 and the comparable figure for Great Britain was 292,342. The equivalent figure at the end of January 1984 were: Scotland—29,078 and Great Britain—256,470.

Note:

The basis of the unemployment count changed in October 1982 with the introduction of voluntary registration at Jobcentres.

Comparisons are also affected by the provisions of the 1983 Budget which means that some men, mainly aged 60 years and over, no longer need to sign on in order to receive supplementary benefits or national insurance credits. It is estimated that some 162,000 men in the United Kingdom (of whom 11,000 were in Scotland) were affected.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the proportion of married males and females unemployed for a year or more aged under 25 years, 25 to 44 years and 45-plus years, respectively, who were unskilled or semi-skilled, had dependent children aged under 16 years, and had an unemployed or economically inactive spouse.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 47]: The following table gives the available information for Great Britain using revised results of the 1983 Labour Force Survey.

North-West

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will list the successes of his Department in reducing unemployment in the north-west of England in 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: Details of the number of people in the north-west who benefited from my Department's employment and training measures in 1984 are as follows:

- there were 24,474 entrants to the community programme, which provides temporary employment for long-term unemployed adults;
- there were 13,974 successful applications for support under the young workers scheme, which is designed to help young people into jobs;
- 8,363 people started up their own businesses under the enterprise allowance scheme;
- 3,718 older workers gave up work early and released their jobs to unemployed people under the job release scheme;
- there were 1,471 entrants to the community industry scheme, which provides temporary jobs for personally and socially disadvantaged young people;
- employers split 38 jobs, involving 76 employees, under the job splitting scheme which encourages employers to open up more part-time opportunities for unemployed people.

In addition, there were 57,222 entrants to the youth training scheme, which provides up to a year's high quality training to enable young people to compete more effectively in the labour market.

But the only way to achieve a substantial impact on unemployment in the north-west and elsewhere is for the Government to maintain their economic policies while encouraging greater enterprise, flexibility and competitiveness in industry and the labour market.

ENVIRONMENT

Hospitals (Drainage and Sewerage Systems)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allocate additional resources to water authorities to enable them to undertake thorough inspections of drainage and sewerage systems in the vicinity of hospitals for detecting rat or cockroach populations with contagious diseases.

Mr. Macfarlane: If the hon. Member is aware of a specific case, she should refer it to the regional water authority which has both the powers and the resources to deal with infestation in sewers.

Local Government Bill

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of the items mentioned in the financial memorandum of the Local Government Bill, stating that the Bill will save £100 million of council expenditure and cut 7,100 jobs.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have nothing to add to the information given in my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 30 November, at column 611.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 31 March of each of the years 1974 to 1984 together with the latest figures the number of local authority employees in England, analysed by part-time/full-time status within sex, covered by each of the items (i) to (v) in Part III of his consultation document "Competition in the Provision of Local Authority Services"; and if he will reconcile these numbers with the published Joint Manpower Watch.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is not available centrally. The Joint Manpower Watch does not collect information for this detailed level of service, nor does it collect information about the sex of employees.

Acid Deposition

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the instances known to his Department of damage caused by acid deposition.

Mr. Waldegrave: Acid deposition can damage both the natural and the urban environment, but it is not the sole cause of environmental acidification and the damage it causes cannot readily be distinguished from other forms of damage. It is therefore difficult to establish the extent to which deposition at current concentrations contribute to damage. As I said in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton) on 11 March, at column 13 my Department has a substantial programme of monitoring and research and I expect reports within the next 18 months which should help in defining the scale of the problem and in elucidating its causes.

Litter Act 1983

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the cost of implementing section 4 of the Litter Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cost of implementation of this section was last estimated in 1978 when the cost of drawing up litter plans was put at £0·25 million and the cost of implementing them was estimated as £1·25 million per annum.

In view of the financial implications and the continued need for restraint in public expenditure we have no plans at the moment to reconsider our decision to defer implementation.

Gipsies

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he takes to satisfy himself of the adequacy of the provision of facilities for gipsies under the Caravan Sites Act 1968, and of the criteria applied in choosing designated gipsy sites; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will review the criteria laid down by his Department for the selection and designation of gipsy sites by local authorities.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department monitors progress on the provision of authorised sites through periodic returns from local authorities, summaries of which are placed in the Library. The arrangements for approval of Exchequer capital grant for local authorities' gipsy site proposals ensure, so far as possible, that the facilities to be provided on such sites are both adequate for their purpose and reflect a due regard for economy. I am satisfied that local authorities already have sufficient guidance in departmental circulars and other supplementary advice issued from time to time to enable them to carry out their statutory functions of selecting and designating sites.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of social, environmental and, where appropriate, permanent housing provision for gipsy caravan dwellers both outside and within the Romany category in continental categories; and if he will publish the findings.

Mr. Macfarlane: No such studies have been made. The arrangements in present UK legislation are sufficient to enable authorities to make adequate provision for gipsies (as defined in the 1968 Act) including the provision of housing accommodation where this is appropriate.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what review he has made of improved housing provision for gipsy caravan dwellers not within the Romany category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: It is not practicable to distinguish between Romanies and other gipsies. I understand, from recent inquiries made by my Department, that a number of authorities have positively encouraged gipsy caravan dwellers to move into permanent housing where this has seemed appropriate and likely to be successful.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he plans to take to protect the gipsy community and designated gipsy sites from incursions by non-gipsy itinerants;

(2) what estimate or survey has been undertaken by his Department to establish how many people who are not gipsies are benefiting from the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Macfarlane: As with the initial provision of sites, their subsequent management is the responsibility of the local authorities, part of whose task will be to ensure as far as possible that the sites are not used or invaded by other than the gipsies for whom they are provided.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of gipsies, or gipsy families, as defined under the Caravan Sites Act 1968, for whom sites have been found since the Act came into operation; and what are the approximate numbers for whom designated sites have still to be found.

Mr. Macfarlane: The available information relates to caravans rather than families. In July 1984 there were 3,913 caravans on council sites, 1,748 on authorised private sites and 3,930 on unauthorised sites.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of sites which have been designated by local authorities for gipsies since the introduction of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and how many further sites are currently under examination.

Mr. Macfarlane: There are at present some 230 official gipsy sites in England compared with about 20 when the Act came into force in 1970. The number of potential sites under examination is a matter for the local authorities in whose areas gipsies are as yet without adequate accommodation.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for the total number of gipsies covered by the Caravan Sites Act 1968 of the adoption of a more restrictive definition of gipsy status; if he will list the alternative definitions which he has considered and the impact each would have on the number of gipsies covered by the Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) on 20 February at column 482. My Department's research, while re-affirming the appropriateness of the present definition, had examined the possibilities and problems involved in attempting to restrict the definition.

Merseyside

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Merseyside.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on Monday 11 March at column 708

Prefabricated Reinforced Concrete Structures

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the significance of the limitation given in his Department's circular 28/84 to the eligibility of owners of prefabricated reinforced concrete houses designed before 1960; and whether dwellings designed after 1960 are not expected to be liable to cracking and concrete spalling to a significant extent as a result of corrosion of the embedded steel reinforcement.

Mr. Gow: There are two distinct types of prefabricated concrete dwellings in this country. Those designed before the wars and immediately after the last war were designed to provide, in the main, two-storey houses and to be assembled by hand. That meant that the prefabricated sections had to be very light and slender. Because they are slender there is little protection for the steel reinforcement and the Building Research Establishment has found that all prefabricated reinforced concrete houses built before 1960 are likely to be affected by the processes of carbonation and attack of chlorides which will lead to corrosion of the reinforcement and consequent cracking of the concrete.

Prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings designed after 1960 were generally made by casting whole walls and floors as single components. These are massive and robust and were used to build not only houses but flats up to 20 or more storeys high. Because of differences in design and improvements in the quality of reinforced concrete, the steel reinforcement in these components is better protected. There is no evidence that the main load-bearing components of these buildings generally are liable to the rapid deterioration and consequent cracking and spalling found in prefabricated reinforced concrete houses of the previous generation.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will assess the extent to which all buildings designed after 1960 and using reinforced concrete structures are likely to be affected by the processes of carbonation and attack by chlorides.

Mr. Gow: The study of the effect of carbonation and attack by chlorides on reinforced concrete structures generally has been a main part of the Building Research Establishment's research programme since 1975. The general principles have been established and published in 1982 in BRE digests 263, 264 and 265, copies of which are in the Library. The processes are complex and the way in which a particular building or class of buildings may be affected is not easily established without testing. It is for individual owners to inspect their buildings as necessary but, as I announced on 23 October last at columns 554-55, the Building Research Establishment is now giving special and urgent attention to the study of large panel system dwellings designed after 1960, which will include investigation of the effect of carbonation and attack by chlorides.

Infrastructure Construction

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the comparative levels of expenditure upon infrastructure construction in the United Kingdom, in each of the other member countries of the European Economic Community, the United States of America and Canada as a total figure in sterling equivalent and as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Gow: I regret that reliable data concerning the levels of expenditure upon infrastructure are not readily available for international comparisons.

North-West (Construction Industry)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to encourage the construction industry in the north-west of England during 1984.

Mr. Gow: Total output of the construction industry in the north-west grew by 9 per cent. in 1984, reflecting the success of the Government's economic policies. New orders grew by 4 per cent. My hon. Friend will be familiar with the work of the Merseyside task force; and with the substantial roads programme described by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Transport to the Building Employers Confederation at its regional meeting on 1 February.

Housing Construction

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the comparative levels of expenditure upon housing construction in the United Kingdom, in each of the other member countries of the European Economic Community, the United States of America and Canada as a total figure in sterling equivalent and as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Gow: International differences in house building costs, population growth and internal migration affect comparisons of this kind.

The available information is given in the table.

Residential construction as a percentage of GDP in 1982

Country	Percentage
Belgium	3·5
Denmark	3·5
France	5·3
Germany (Federal Republic)	6·1
Greece	5·3
Ireland	5·4
Italy	5·3
Luxembourg	4·9
Netherlands	5·2
United Kingdom	*3·4
Canada	3·5
United States	3·0

* Including expenditure on major improvements for residential properties.

In 1983 expenditure in the United Kingdom on residential construction as a percentage of GDP increased to 3·6 per cent.

Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 (Land Sales)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any of the land that was the subject of directions made under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 has been sold by the landowning local authorities concerned.

Mr. Macfarlane: I understand that Oldham and Darlington borough councils decided on 7 March to accept tenders for their sites. There is little doubt that the sales will be completed in due course. The Government is determined that where public bodies own land which is unused or underused they should take early action to bring it into use or dispose of it. The directions that have been made are evidence of our resolve.

Rate Capped Local Authorities

Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to enter into negotiations with any of the rate capped local authorities.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: On 7 March, or shortly after, the four precepting rate limited authorities set precepts within the precept limits approved by Parliament. Portsmouth, Basildon and Brent have set rates within their rate limits. However, many of the rate limited rating authorities and some other high spending Labour-controlled councils, have claimed that they have taken a principled stand against the provisions of the Rates Act 1984, by refusing to fix a rate. In fact they have done nothing of the sort. Each council knew quite well that it did not have to fix a rate on 7 March, and that a decision could be postponed without immediate legal consequences. The terms of the resolutions they have passed clearly demonstrate this.

These authorities have repeatedly said that they intend to "negotiate" with Government to seek the withdrawal of the Rates Act, the rewriting of the rate support grant settlement and the payment of substantial sums in additional grant to support higher levels of spending. Their spokesman, Councillor Blunkett, has written to me asking to bring a group of councils to engage in such "negotiations".

I wish to make two things clear. First, there is no question of the Government reconsidering the rate limits or the precept limits or the rate support grant settlement for 1985-86, all of which Parliament has approved. There will be no "negotiations". Secondly, while I am prepared to meet the local authority associations to discuss issues of general concern, or to meet individual authorities where they have genuine local issues to raise with me, I see no purpose in a further meeting with the ad hoc and unrepresentative group led by Councillor Blunkett. Nearly half of that group have now complied with the law and set rates or precepts. I look to the remainder to follow this example.

No rating authority can now have any excuse for delay in carrying out its duty to make a lawful rate. But if any authorities are still considering delay they should be clear about the consequences.

In addition to covering their own expenditure, rating authorities must rate to cover precepts issued to them by county councils and other bodies. In London the first payments in respect of the Metropolitan police precept and the London Regional Transport levy fall due on 12 April. Where rating authorities fail to pay over an instalment by the due date, it is open to the precepting authority to charge interest on the amount outstanding.

For block grant purposes, where an authority fails to provide an estimate of its spending for the forthcoming year, I must make my own best estimate of their expenditure to calculate their grant entitlement.

The Government have carefully considered their liability to make certain payments to rating authorities where no rate has been made. I am advised that in these circumstances the following payments should not be made —because the rates to which they relate are not being paid—rate rebate subsidy; grants towards rate relief for disabled persons and institutions; compensation to local authorities for loss of rate income in enterprise zones; and contributions in lieu of rates on Crown and diplomatic properties. Authorities will not therefore begin to receive these payments until they fix their rates.

Finally, I should remind all councillors that if a failure to rate leads to a loss or deficiency and the auditor considers that this results from wilful misconduct, then those responsible may be surcharged. If the total loss amounts to more than £2,000, disqualification follows automatically. In the light of the statements that have been made by certain councillors about their intention to break the law, I have no doubt that auditors will be watching developments very closely.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Courses)

Mr. Eggar asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the names, grades, present and future jobs, if known, of all the civil servants who are currently attending the course described in the document "Top Management".

Mr. Hayhoe: The names, grades and present jobs of the civil servants concerned are as follows:

Civil servant	Grade	Department/Job
A. Brown	3	Department of Employment. Until recently seconded to Department of Energy; about to become Director, Personnel and Management Services Division.
J. A. Chilcot	3	Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office). Head of Personnel Management Group.
M. Elliott	Diplomatic Service 4	Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Head of Far Eastern Department
M. Howe	3	Office of Fair Trading. Head of Competition Policy Division.
A. C. Hutton	3	Department of Trade and Industry. Head of overseas Trade Division 2.
C. E. Johnson	3	Ministry of Defence. Director General of Defence Accounts.
M. Malone-Lee	3	Department of Health and Social Security. Director of Personnel and Establishments at Headquarters.
H. Morison	3	Scottish Office. Scottish Home and Health Department—NHS Management, Finance and Operational Planning.
J. D. Noulton	5	Department of Transport. Head of Finance Transport Industries Division.
W. G. Sanders	3	Ministry of Defence. Director General Future Material Projects (Naval).
N. W. Summerton	5	Department of the Environment. Head of Division dealing with policy on defective housing.

Their future employment is a matter for their Departments to decide. Copies of the "Top Management Programme" booklet are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Outgoers Scheme

44. Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the operation of the outgoers scheme in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: One hundred and ninety five producers have ceased production under the terms of the Milk Supplementary Levy (Outgoers) Scheme, releasing approximately 12·5 million litres of quota in a full year. Only two applications remain to be finalised.

Gas Industry (Newry and Belfast)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest estimated cost of the closure of the gas industry in Newry and Belfast.

Dr. Boyson: The cost of the closure of the gas industry in Newry and the greater Belfast area (that is the Belfast, Bangor and Newtownards undertakings) has been estimated at some £80 million. This figure includes deficit support for 1984-85.

Kilroot Power Station

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made, in considering whether to approve the conversion of Kilroot power station from oil to coal or lignite-firing, of the current capacity of the heavy engineering and plant fabrication industries in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: Following any decision to convert Kilroot power station from oil to solid fuel firing, the placing of contracts for the work would be a matter for the Northern Ireland Electricity Service. The service is very conscious of the importance of using local sources where appropriate.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is yet in a position to make an announcement on his decision on the conversion of Kilroot power station from oil to coal or lignite firing.

Dr. Boyson: No; but I hope to make an announcement soon.

Lignite

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest estimated tonnage of lignite reserves in the Ballymoney area of North Antrim; what evaluation his Department has made of their potential for commercial development; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: The results of an exploratory shallow drilling programme, commissioned by the Department of Economic Development, were made available in November 1984 for purchase by the mining industry so that it can apply for prospecting licences by 28 June 1985 and undertake the detailed investigation and further exploration that will be necessary to evaluate the precise size of deposits and their economic and commercial potential. Until this work has been done, it will not be possible to provide a precise estimate of lignite deposits in the Ballymoney area.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his Department's programme of research into the use of Crumlin lignite for fuelling power stations has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: Studies commissioned by the Department of Economic Development, to establish the uses to which Northern Ireland's indigenous lignite might be put, highlighted the potential benefit to be derived from using lignite as a fuel source for the generation of electricity. A detailed test programme is also necessary to establish the technical and economic criteria for using lignite in electricity generation. This test programme, which is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Electricity Service, is currently under way and will continue for some time.

SCOTLAND

Woodlands and Conifer Forests

45. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding the development of (a) farm woodlands and (b) upland conifer forests.

Mr. John MacKay: It is the policy of the Government to encourage the development of both farm woodlands and upland conifer forests.

Fishing Industry

46. Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from the Scottish Fishermen's Federation regarding the implications for the fishing industry of the proposed accession of Spain and Portugal to the European Economic Community.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations from the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on this subject. Officials of my right hon. Friend's Department have kept the federation informed of developments in the negotiations.

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of cormorants in Scotland; and if their number is declining.

Mr. Ancram: I understand from the Nature Conservancy Council that the last survey of cormorants was carried out in 1969-70 when it was established that there were 3,671 breeding pairs in Scotland. There is no evidence to show that their number is declining, but I understand that a pilot study is being undertaken by the British Trust for Ornithology later this year which will seek to determine the present number of cormorants.

Sickness and Absenteeism

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of days lost through sickness and absenteeism by employees in each of the health board areas in Scotland for the latest convenient year; and if he will make a statement on how this rate compares with rates of sickness and absenteeism both in previous years for health board employees and in other sectors of employment.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available from the statistics held centrally.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange for the booklet on the Housing Defects Act 1984 to be issued to all relevant local authorities, as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Ancram: Work on the preparation of the booklet is almost complete and copies will be sent to local authorities as soon as possible.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum was allocated in the housing capital allocation to cover remedial work for local authority houses covered by the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Ancram: The Housing Defects Act 1984 does not apply to local authority houses. In determining local authorities' housing capital allocations we pay close attention to their planned expenditure on remedial work to structurally defective houses of all types, as set out in their forward capital programmes, although we have not earmarked specific sums within the allocations for this purpose.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make it his policy for semi-detached houses joined together to be treated together if one is privately-owned and one tenanted for the purposes of the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Ancram: No. The private owner whose house is to be reinstated under the Housing Defects Act should be able to have repairs carried out to his property without simultaneous action being taken by the local authority on the adjoining house. If the local authority is taking action to deal with its half of a semi-detached block and no action has been taken by the adjoining private owner, then it would be possible for that owner, assuming his eligibility for assistance by way of reinstatement grant, to ask the authority to do the work on his house at the same time. But the authority would have to satisfy itself that the method of repair would be likely to make the house suitable security for a loan in the private sector.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland by what form of monitoring the Forestry Commission ascertains that aerial pesticide spraying carried out on its behalf has been carried out effectively on, and only on, the areas prescribed for spraying.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission monitors aerial applications of insecticides by making it a requirement for the contractors to have an electronic track guidance system and to provide a print out of the track flown. Contractors are also required to use a droplet size which maximises deposition on the target foliage and the larvae feeding on it. Advice on the latter is obtained from the Cranfield Institute of Technology. Assessments of the target pest population shortly before and after spraying are made to determine the effectiveness of application.

The effectiveness of herbicide spraying is assessed by plotting the resultant kill of herbage. This has shown application to be very precise.

Forestry (Felling Licences)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether there are any cases in the last three years when applications for felling licences for conversion of woodlands to agriculture were refused by the Forestry Commission, even though the agriculture department concerned had confirmed that the proposed conversion would make a significant contribution to the viability and economy of the remainder of the agricultural holding, and there were no other objections to the proposed felling from any other authorities consulted;

(2) on how many occasions in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1985-86 to date the Forestry Commission consulted the agriculture departments over applications for felling licences to clear woodland for agricultural purposes.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 1985, Official Report, column 619, the consultation procedures between the Forestry Commission and agriculture departments outline on page 4 of the Commission's booklet, Consultation Procedures for Forestry Grants and Felling Permissions, are currently carried out.

Mr. John MacKay: These procedures are carried out in all cases. If I may expand on my reply given to the hon. Member on 22 February 1985, at column 619, the Agriculture Departments do not normally give the Forestry Commission advice, such, on whether felling licence applications should be granted for the conversion of woodland to agricultural use. What they do provide is an assessment of the impact that any such conversion would have on the viability of the agricultural holding. This assessment is taken into account by the Commission in deciding whether there are grounds for making an exception to its general policy of a presumption against conversion.

Auchincruive College and Hannah Research Institute

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocation has been made to Auchincruive college and to the Hannah research institute for 1985-86; how this compares in real terms with allocations over the past five years; and what are the manpower implications in both cases.

Mr. John MacKay: No financial allocations for 1985-86 have yet been made to these bodies. Allocations will follow the publication of Supply Estimates later this month. My right hon. and noble Friend will write to the hon. Member in due course providing the information he has requested.

NHS Charges

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much estimated extra income will be raised in Scotland by increased National Health Service charges; and what proportion of expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland is represented by the new charges.

Mr. John MacKay: It is estimated that the increases in NHS charges to be introduced from 1 April 1985 will provide £6·9 million additional income for the NHS in Scotland in 1985-86. Total income from charges in the year is expected to amount to 2·0 per cent. of estimated total gross expenditure on the NHS.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are being made for immediate payment of the severe disablement allowance to those in Scotland suffering from blindness or partial blindness.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 46.]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) on 12 March at columns 119-20. Payment of severe disablement allowance is made as soon as the adjudicating authorities have decided that the statutory conditions are satisfied.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Graduated Pension Fund

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what changes have occurred recently in the valuation of the graduated pension fund;

(2) how large is the graduated pension fund;

(3) by how much the graduated pension fund has increased in each year since its inception.

Mr. Whitney: Contributions in respect of the graduated pension scheme which ran from 1961 to 1975 were paid into the national insurance fund. Graduated benefit continues to be paid from the main NI fund. The current (November 1984) value of one unit of graduated pension is £4·67 and the maximum amount of graduated benefit payable is currently £4·02 per week for a man and £3·36 for a woman. Every £7·50 (£9 for women) paid is graduated contributions earned one unit of graduated pensions.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take to improve services for those addicted to tranquillisers and sedatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: General hospital and community health and family practitioner services are available to those addicted to tranquillisers and sedatives. In addition, funds have been allocated under the drugs initiative to three local voluntary organisations providing services specifically for those addicted to tranquillisers and many other projects offer services to this group as well as to those misusing other drugs. Guidelines on good clinical practice in the treatment of drug misuse have been issued to all doctors. They contain sdvice on the addictive potential of benzodiazepines and on withdrawal procedures. Barbiturates have from the beginning of this year been included within the scope of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those voluntary organisations concerned with those who have become addicted to prescribed tranquillisers and sedatives; which of them have applied to his Department for grant; what sum was applied for in each case; for what purpose; and what has been the result.

Mr. John Patten: We are only aware of voluntary organisations concerned with those who have become addicted to prescribed tranquillisers and sedatives which have applied for grants under the drugs initiative. These are:

Voluntary Organisation	Amount Applied for	Description of project	Result of Application
TRANX	£123,683	Self-help group for tranquilliser users (Harrow)	£89,183 approved
Tranx Release (Northampton)	£29,892	Advisory and Self-help service for tranquilliser users	£29,892 approved
West Cumbria MIND (Copeland)	£85,442	Advisory and Self-help service for tranquilliser users	£85,442 approved
Newcastle Association for Mental Health	£99,300	Tranquilliser withdrawal support project	Under consideration
North Staffs Depressives Advisory Service	£200,000	Tranquilliser advisory/ counselling service	Under consideration
Haringey Women and Health Centre	£210,075	Service for tranquilliser users	Under consideration

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which parts of the United Kingdom have been selected as areas of priority for receiving initial sets of the leaflets to be sent out by his Department to parents about teenage drug addiction.

Mr. John Patten: Initial sets of the Department's leaflets for parents about drug misuse are now being distributed as quickly as possible to all health authorities, social services departments, family practitioner committees, general medical practitioners, local authorities, community health councils and appropriate voluntary organisations throughout England.

I understand my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, is undertaking a similar exercise throughout Wales.

In addition, the leaflets will be offered direct to parents through national press advertising starting in the next few days.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of retirement pensioners in Scotland with increments, analysed by category, age and proportion of all retirement pensioners, together with the average amount of increment.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is in the table:

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of retirement pensioners in Scotland in receipt of additional component and guaranteed minimum pension entitlement; and what is the average amount.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1983 there were, in Scotland, 86,170 recipients of additional component and 49,300 recipients of guaranteed minimum pension. The average amounts in payment were £2·49 and £2·34 respectively.

Waiting Lists (Cornwall)

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current waiting list for hip replacement operations in Cornwall; and what steps are being taken to reduce the list.

Mr. John Patten: Waiting list information is available centrally by the specialty of treatment and not by operation. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority which may be able to let him have the required information.

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current waiting list for rheumatology treatment in Cornwall; and what steps are being taken to reduce the list.

Mr. John Patten: The number of persons on National Health Service inpatient waiting lists for admission to rheumatology departments in the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly district health authority on 30 September 1984, the latest date for which information is available centrally, was 59 (provisional).

For the second part of his question I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 7 February at column 683.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to revise the capital disregard level set out in part III of schedule 1 to the Supplementary Benefit Act 1976.

Mr. John Patten: A consultative document on a possible revised scheme for new assessment regulations, including the treatment of capital, for the purposes of charges for local authority residential accommodation was issued early last year. We will be giving further consideration to the matter in the context of the outcome of the supplementary benefit review and taking into account comments received on the proposals in the consultative document.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in pursuance of the answer of 11 March, he will notify the hon. Member for Walsall, North when the information sought in the original question is available.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend will write to the hon. Member when the information is available.

Drug Abusers

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a full list of all those organisations which have received financial assistance from the £10 million allocated for drug abusers, indicating how much each has received and for what purpose.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is in the table:

"Support for the Elderly"

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take following the recent report of the Audit Commission on "Support for the Elderly".

Mr. John Patten: Most of the recommendations of the Audit Commission report on managing social services for the elderly are primarily addressed to local authorities and will be for consideration by them. Those addressed to central Government will be considered by the Departments responsible.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of persons eligible for exemption from prescription charges on low income grounds in 1981 and 1983, the number of persons entitled to full remission of dental and optical charges on low income grounds in 1981 and 1983 and the percentage of those entitled in each category who claimed exemption or remission.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information is not available. Eligibility for exemption and remission on low income grounds, as distinct from automatic exemption and remission, is determined only when claimed and is dependent on the claimant's financial circumstances at that time. The number of persons who received full remission of dental charges on low income grounds was 94,000 in 1981 and 162,000 in 1983. Corresponding figures cannot be separated out from the total number of exemption and remissions for prescription and optical charges. The totals were:—

Number of prescription items for which exemption was given	205,000,000	227,000,000
Number of optical dispensings for which charges were remitted in full or in part	815,000	1,121,000

Tranquillisers and Sedatives

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of prescriptions for, and the total amount prescribed of (a) tranquillisers and (b) sedatives in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information is available only from 1975 onwards, and for tranquillisers and sedatives taken together. The number of prescriptions for them in each of the years 1975-83 was as follows:

Year	(Thousands)
1975	20,868
1976	21,190
1977	20,836
1978	21,028
1979	20,516
1980	18,920
1981	18,378
1983	14,657

Figures are England only and are derived from a 1 in 200 sample of all prescriptions. The large reduction between 1982 and 1983 is due mainly to the reclassification of certain drugs as anti-emetics rather than sedatives or tranquillisers.

Disabled People (Organisations)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 28 February, Official Report, column 269, concerning grants to organisations representing the disabled, if he will give for those 11 organisations receiving an annual grant of over £200,000 from his Department, a summary of their objectives and functions, their total annual income and the number of years for which they have been receiving a grant from his Department.

Mr. Newton: Listed are those organisations specifically dealing with disability which received a grant of £200,000 or more from the Department in 1983-84 under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 (General Scheme). The first year in which they received a section 64 grant is given in brackets.

Grants made to certain disability organisations under Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 - General Scheme - in 1983-84

	Amount (£)
Disabled Living Foundation	256,000	(1972-73)
MENCAP	256,917	(1981-82)
Motability	331,228	(1977-78)
National Association for Mental Health	350,000	(1976-77)
Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation	240,000	(1977-78)
Royal National Institute for the Blind (Embossed Literature Service)	240,000	*(1948)

It would be for the organisations themselves to provide information about their objectives, functions and accounts.

* The grant for this service, currently made under section 64, dates back to an agreement made following the 1948 National Assistance Act that an Exchequer grant be made towards the production of braille literature. Prior to 1948 grants had been made by local authorities.

Board and Lodging Establishments

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will extend the Registered Homes Act to cover all board and lodging establishments as well as residential care units and other places providing accommodation for the long-term homeless;

(2) if he will seek powers to extend the existing powers of inspection of residential care units held by local authorities to include all board and lodging establishments.

Mr. John Patten: No. The Registered Homes Act 1984 provides for the registration and inspection of residential establishments providing personal care; its provisions are not appropriate for other types of establishment. Local authorities already have powers under the Housing Acts to monitor houses in multiple occupation and any extension of these powers is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

National Insurance Credits

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what class of national insurance credits is given to 16 and 17-year-olds (a) on youth training schemes as trainees, (b) in work earning below the lower earnings limit, (c) at college or school and (d) on supplementary benefit; and in each case, what are the benefits towards which the credit may be counted

Mr. Newton: Class 3 national insurance credits are given to all 16 and 17-year-olds to the extent required to make a year count for claims to retirement pension, widows pension and widowed mothers allowance. If a claim to unemployment benefit, sickness benefit or maternity allowance is made, class 1 credits are also available as necessary for the contribution year on which that claim is based.

Single Payments

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments for maternity needs were made to one-parent families in the years 1978 to 1984; and what was the average payment for maternity needs.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the form requested. Single payments for maternity needs have been identifiable only from November 1980 when the regulatory based scheme was introduced. The number of single payments for maternity needs to single parents together with the average payment for all groups for the years 1981 and 1982 is as follows. Data for 1983 and 1984 are not yet available.

Year	Number to single parents	Average amounts all groups £
1981	28,000	43·45

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries of 1981 and 1982

Because the figures relate only to claimants who received single payments during one week in December 1981 and 1982 and not to those who received a single payment during the course of the relevant year but who ceased to receive benefit before the week of the enquiry, they are an under-estimate of the total number of single payments made during the particular year.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments or exceptional needs payments before 1980 were claimed by one-parent families on supplementary benefit in the years 1978 to 1984; what they were for; and what was the average payment for (a) one-parent families and (b) other claimants.

Mr. Whitney: The two tables cover the period 1978-82; information for 1983 and 1984 is not yet available. Because of a change in the method of collecting data on the introduction of the regulatory based scheme, the tables are not comparable. The average payment relates to all categories of claimant as the information for one-parent families is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many one-parent families on supplementary benefit had additional requirements in the years 1978 to 1984; and what they were for.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Inequalities in Health

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the present cost of implementing recommendations 10, 12, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28 and 29 respectively, of the working group report on inequalities in health using the same criteria as in his answer of 16 December 1982, Official Report, columns 242-3.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. It is no longer possible to produce costings which would be compatible with the figures given earlier and bear any relation to the likely present costs of implementation.

Residential Homes

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what responsibilities are placed upon private and local authority residential care homes to provide adequate care, supervision and access for inspection by local authorities and central Government; and what sanctions are taken against residential care homes which do not meet expected standards.

Mr. John Patten: The Residential Care Home Regulations 1984 which took effect from 1 January 1985 specify the services and facilities to be provided in voluntary and privately run residential care homes and the way in which they are to be conducted. In addition, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Social Services and the Secretary of State for Wales have commended "Home Life", a code of practice for residential care, as a guide to the standards they expect local authorities to have regard to both in registering and inspecting these homes and in running their own homes. Registration authorities may refuse or withdraw registration from persons who do not comply with the registration criteria.

The Department's social work service officers are empowered to enter and inspect these homes and similar homes operated by local authorities.

Nursing Homes

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what responsibilities are placed upon private and local authority nursing homes to provide adequate care, supervision and access for inspection by local authorities and central government; and what sanctions are taken against nursing homes which do not meet expected standards.

Mr. John Patten: Nursing homes in England and Wales are registered and inspected by district health authorities; those which do not meet the required standards may have their registration cancelled.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total administrative cost of each regional health authority in the last year to a convenient date, including the amounts for expenses and remuneration of chairmen and committees, the number of staff and the total of salaries and wages paid, the cost of rent and equipment, and all other significant items of expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' monitor FMI 84/6 last published on 17 July 1984 will be updated to include figures for 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. John Patten: Updated and extended versions of the tables published in OPCS monior FMI 84/6, including analyses of conceptions occurring in 1982, were published on 28 February 1985 in "Birth Statistics 1983" (OPCS Series FMI No. 10), a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for conceptions occurring in 1983 will be published in an OPCS Monitor as soon as they become available, towards the end of 1985. Figures for 1984 will be published about a year later.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects his noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Tatton, dated 22 February, on the subject of his reply, reference PO(6)4449 112, to the hon. Member's letter of 20 December 1984 about Terpoin Antitussive's exclusion from the list of drugs prescribable on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My noble Friend has written to my hon. Friend today.

Drugs (Therapeutic Applications)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the therapeutic applications of Gaviscon, Maalox, Gelusil and Mucogel which cannot be met by Polycrol;

(2) what are the therapeutic applications of Polycrol which cannot be met by Gaviscon, Maalox, Gelusil and Mucogel.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: These antacids have varying, and sometimes different, indications for use. The group of independent medical and pharmaceutical experts set up to advise on the selected list recommended that all clinical needs could be met without dimethicone-containing antacids such as Polycrol. We have accepted this advice.

Drug Manufacturers (Inducements)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply of 25 February, Official Report, columns 71-72, if any savings on the adjustment of reimbursement prices paid to dispensing doctors will be made to the National Health Service;

(2) pursuant to the reply of 25 February, Official Report, columns 71-72, over what period of time and for how long dispensing doctors have been obtaining discounts on drugs costs from wholesalers and manufacturers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 272]: There are no savings to be transferred to the National Health Service. General medical practitioners' remuneration is set so that all the practitioners as a body are reimbursed either directly or indirectly through fees and allowances all the expenses they incur in the course of providing general medical services. Actual expenses due to the profession as a body are, and always have been, calculated after deducting discount. Before the introduction of the discount scale dispensing doctors were, however, reimbursed the cost of drugs without any adjustment for discount. As a result, they received a disproportionate share of the total expenses incurred by and reimbursed to the profession. Any gain by dispensing doctors from discounts has therefore been at the expense of other doctors and not the taxpayer. We do not know precisely how long doctors have been receiving discounts but the practice appears to have developed in the last five years or so.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those hospital closures or partial closures to which community health councils have objected since 1979, indicating whether or not the closure went ahead.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 419]: Following are those hospitals for which proposals for whole or partial closure were referred to the Secretary of State for approval because they were opposed by community health councils. The table indicates which proposals were approved or not approved, or on which a decision was pending at 31 December 1984.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given by the United Kingdom and its allies to the use of an international inspectorate under the United Nations' control for purposes of verification under international arms control agreements; and whether any view has been expressed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on such a proposal.

Mr. Luce: We and our allies have always stressed the need for effective verification of international arms control agreements. On 12 March I introduced at the conference on disarmament in Geneva a further British proposal for comprehensive international inspection of civil chemical plants to ensure non-diversion to illicit military stockpiles.

No recent specific proposals for an international verification inspectorate under the United Nations' control have been made, but we are prepared to consider any serious proposals which will improve the monitoring and verification of compliance with existing and future international arms control agreements.

Immigration Control

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the recommendation in the report on immigration control procedures by the Commission for Racial Equality that his Department should fund two additional advisory posts at its Bangladesh immigrants advisory service in Sylhet.

Mr. Renton: During my recent visit to Bangladesh I was able to go to Sylhet to consider the matter carefully on the spot. Since that visit I have decided that the provision of additional resources for two further advisory posts cannot be justified in the present economic climate.

Central America (Diplomatic Representatives)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of United Kingdom diplomatic representatives in 1983, 1984 and 1985 for the countries of Central America.

Mr. Renton: The following table gives the information requested:

United Kingdom based staff (on 1 January)

‖ In addition a first secretary resident in Managua is also accredited to Costa Rica.
¶ In addition the defence attaché resident at Bogotá is accredited to Panama.
● Includes a defence liaison officer.
■ In addition a first secretary resident in San Salvador is also accredited to Honduras.
• The ambassador to Honduras is also accredited to El Salvador.
The ambassador to Costa Rica is also accredited to Nicaragua.

In addition, the defence and assistant defence attachés resident in Mexico City are accredited to Honduras, El Salvador and Nicaragua.

VE Day

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions have now been given to British embassies abroad over responding to invitations to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the end of the war against Nazi Germany.

Mr. Renton: We will consider our response to specific invitations to commemorative events in the light of the nature of the event and the level of representation.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what offers have been made either to the Falkland Islands Administration or to Her Majesty's Government of agricultural land by the Falkland Islands Company since June 1982; what reply was given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: In addition to offering for sale to the public 50 50-acre plots along the Port Stanley—Fitzroy road the Falkland Islands Company has since June 1982:

(i) Offered to the Falkland Islands Government, free of charge, a 50-acre plot for grassland trials. The offer has been accepted;

(ii) Sold to the Falkland Islands Government 8,300 acres of agricultural land for the construction of Mount Pleasant airport.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomats have claimed diplomatic immunity in relation to alleged criminal offences in each of the past 10 years; of these numbers, how many diplomats then left the United Kingdom and how many continued in office; and what was the general nature of the charges.

Mr. Renton: The evidence given by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in June 1984 to the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs gave details of criminal offences since 1 January 1974 allegedly committed by persons enjoying diplomatic immunity. This evidence listed 13 alleged serious offences in 1984 which were then known to us. The known total for the whole of 1984 is 48, of which the general nature was: drinking and driving 32; theft 13; other three.

The following numbers of diplomats are known to have been transferred from the United Kingdom following representations by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office about offences they are alleged to have committed:

1983	17
1984	13
1985	to date four (plus one waiver of immunity)

The corresponding figures for the earlier years could not be extracted from our records except at disproportionate cost. Centralised records were not kept before 1982.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Farmers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the financial years ended 1980 to 1984 the gross trading profit of farmers for tax purposes on the same basis as that used in the replies to questions from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 8 March 1982, Official Report, columns 299-300, 29 March 1982, Official Report, columns 21-2, and 21 April 1982, Official Report, columns 92-3, if he will add particulars of the taxable income after reliefs, the numbers in each income band, the number of wives counted separately from their husbands and the gross profit accruing to such wives, and the number of partnerships and partners.

Mr. Moore: The available information has been set out in eight tables, each including notes on definition and coverage, a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House. I regret that information by band of profits is not available for companies, that the source of the information for individuals does not distinguish partnership income from that of sole traders, and that information for periods covering 1984 is not yet available.

‡ 1980 standard industrial classification.

Note to part (a) of Table 1:

Agricultural companies are those whose main activity is agriculture. Their trading profits may include profits from non-agricultural activities. Companies whose main activity is not agriculture are excluded although they may also carry on agricultural activities.

Notes to part (b) of Table 1:

Information on agricultural companies alone is not available after 1981-82 as, with the introduction of the Standard Industrial Classification (1980 revised), those companies which hire out agricultural machinery (without operatives) were reclassified with other hire companies and the remaining agricultural companies are not identified separately from horticultural companies.

Agricultural and horticultural companies are those whose main activity is agriculture or horticulture. Their trading profits may include profits from non-agricultural and non-horticultural activities. Companies whose main activity is not agriculture or horticulture are excluded although they may also carry on agricultural or horticultural activities.

Notes to both parts of Table 1:

Gross trading profit is after deduction of short term interest and before any adjustments for losses, stock relief and capital allowances.

Taxable income after reliefs includes income other than trading profits and is after deduction of losses, stock relief, capital allowances and other reliefs.

Table 2—Individuals (Summary)

Gross profit for tax purposes (£m)	1,430	1,460
Taxable profit (£m)	942	916

The number of cases is the number of individuals with self-employment income whose largest source of profit is agriculture.

Gross profit includes balancing charges and stock relief withdrawn. It also includes any non-agricultural profits of the individual concerned but excludes the agricultural profits of individuals whose largest source of profit is not from agriculture. The profit was mainly earned in accounting periods ending in the year before the Income Tax year.

(b) Individuals in Agriculture and horticulture (1980 standard industrial classification)

	Income tax year
	1981-82	1982-83
Number of cases (thousands)	301	305
Gross profit for tax purposes (£m)	1,550	1,630
Taxable profit (£m)	1,020	1,130

For these years, incomes from agriculture cannot be distinguished from incomes from horticulture. The number of cases is the number of married men and single people whose "main source"—usually but not always the largest source—of earned income is from self employment in agriculture and horticulture; plus the number of married women whose largest source of self employment income is from agriculture and horticulture.

Gross profit includes balancing charges and stock relief withdrawn. It also includes any non agricultural/horticultural profits of the individual concerned but excludes profits from agricultural/horticultural of married men and single people whose "main source" of earned income is not from self-employment in agriculture and horticulture, and of married women whose largest source of self employment income is not from agriculture and horticulture.

Taxable profit is gross profit less losses, stock relief and capital allowances so far as allowed for the Income Tax year. Partners are counted individually but cannot be distinguished from sole traders. Wives are counted separately from their husbands.

With the same industrial coverage (ie excluding horticulture) as used for this table, but otherwise using the new definition of largest or main source of income for subsequent years, given in the note to part b of Table 2, the total number of cases shown above would be reduced to about 267,000 and the amount of gross profit to about £1,440 million. The bulk of these reductions would be within the gross profit range £1 to £1,000.

Oil Prices

Mr. Batiste asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of a drop in the price of oil of one United States dollar per barrel.

Mr. Moore: A change in the dollar price of oil may have an effect on the exchange rate and can also affect non-oil tax revenues. If it is assumed that there are no such second-order effects, then a reduction of $1 per barrel in the oil price would reduce Government revenues by some £½ billion in a full year.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate what share of the market in goods currently zero-rated for value added tax is held by domestic producers and what share is held by foreign producers;

(2) if he will estimate the increase in import penetration if goods currently zero-rated for value added tax were exempt in the next financial year;

(3) if he will list the categories of goods currently zero-rated for value added tax; and if he will estimate the revenue to be raised from each of them if they were exempt from value added tax in the next financial year;

(4) whether any study has been conducted into the administrative savings to be made by small firms if goods currently zero-rated for value added tax were exempt in the next financial year;

(5) if he will estimate the proportion of family expenditure currently accounted for by goods which are zero rated for value added tax; and by how much it would change if they were exempt in the next financial year;

(6) what the effect on the retail price index in the next financial year would be if goods which are now zero-rated for value added tax were exempt;

(7) what is his policy towards the exemption of goods and services from value added tax in the light of the provisions of the European Economic Community's sixth value added tax directive.

Mr. Hayhoe: Goods and services which are zero-rated are specified in schedule 5 to the Value Added Tax Act 1983; the main items are:

Group 1—Food and drink, except (a) when supplied in the course of catering and (b) certain foods, alcoholic and soft drinks and pet food.
Group 2—Sewerage services and water.
Group 3—Books and newspapers.
Group 4—Talking books for the blind and handicapped and wireless sets for the blind.
Group 5—Newspaper advertisements.
Group 6—News services.
Group 7—Fuel and power (but not road fuel).
Group 8—Construction of buildings.
Group 9—International services.
Group 10—Transport.
Group 11—Caravans and houseboats.
Group 12—Gold.
Group 13—Bank notes.
Group 14—Drugs, medicines and appliances.
Group 15—Certain import transactions, prior to customs entry of the goods; transfer of goods or provisions of services by a United Kingdom or Isle of Man business to its address abroad; supplies to fulfil contracts relating to international defence collaboration projects.
Group 16—Charities.
Group 17—Young children's clothing and footwear.

Supplies of goods are also zero-rated if the goods are exported or shipped as stores on a voyage or flight to a destination outside the United Kingdom.

Most goods and services which are zero-rated are supplied by domestic producers. The main exceptions are food, young children's clothing and footwear.

The zero-rate of VAT applies directly to about 25 per cent. of consumers' spending, and to a further 10 per cent. in respect of expenditure on housing, which is indirectly affected by the zero-rating of new construction.

The EC sixth VAT directive specified those goods and services which member states must or may exempt from VAT. To extend exemption to other supplies, whether at present standard-rated or zero-rated, would be in breach of the directive. My hon. Friend's questions about the various effects of exempting supplies which are now zero-rated are therefore hypothetical.

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what communications he has had with the manufacturers of confectionery for the Indian community in the United Kingdom about the applicability of value added tax to their products.

Mr. Hayhoe: None.

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations Her Majesty's Government received from the European Commission concerning the compatability with the sixth value added tax directive of the exemption of certain goods and services from value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The EC Commisssion has issued one reasoned opinion on the United Kingdom's exemptions from VAT, concerning medical goods supplied together with services by the medical and paramedical professions. The Commission's case is that the directive's exemption for "medical care" covers services only and not related goods. It is the Government's view that the words "medical care" were deliberately used to cover supplies of both goods and services needed to treat a patient's condition and we have firmly rejected the reasoned opinion. It is now for the Commission to decide whether to pursue the matter to the European Court of Justice.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received since his Budget on matters related to value added tax.

Mr. Hayhoe: A very large number.

Mr. Batiste asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the net cost to the Treasury, taking into account savings of administrative costs, of raising the threshold for value added tax to (a) £50,000, (b) £75,000 and (c) £100,000.

Mr. Hayhoe: Increases in the limit of this magnitude would cause such a change in the nature of the tax that it is not possible to make a realistic estimate of the net cost.

European Community Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the European Economic Community Council of Ministers has taken when the European Assembly has put commitment appropriations into the European Economic Community Budget, although the money for them is not available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under article 203 of the treaty of Rome the European Parliament has the final say on non-obligatory expenditure. The build-up of commitments relating to non-obligatory expenditure has been criticised by the Court of Auditors. The United Kingdom is seeking to improve the Community's financial control and, with other member states, will look for improvements to meet the Court's criticisms during the 1986 budgetary procedures. The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers, which I attended on 11 March, agreed that Permanent Representatives of member states should examine these issues further and report back to the Council.

Fuel Taxation

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total taxation element in the price of (a) a gallon of petrol and (b) a gallon of derv, in (i) May 1979, (ii) May 1984 and (iii) January 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is as follows:

	May 1979	May 1984	January 1985
Premium petrol
pence/gallon	39·9	101·9	102·6
per cent. of price	44·8	55·6	54·3
Derv
pence/gallon	41·9	88·4	89·9
per cent. of price	45·3	51·1	48·7

Married Women

Mr. Rowe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received on the treatment of the unearned income of married women on their tax return; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I have received about 50 letters on this subject in the past year.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total yield from capital gains tax in the latest available year.

Mr. Moore: £671 million in 1983-84. The budget estimate for 1984-85 is £710 million.

Pound Sterling

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table, taking 1964 as a base year, showing the spending power of the pound sterling in the United Kingdom from 1964, and in each year to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lawson: The internal purchasing power of the pound (based on movements in the RPI) is set out in the following table.

Year	Purchasing power (1964 = 100)
1964	100
1965	96
1966	92
1967	90
1968	86
1969	81
1970	76
1971	70
1972	65
1973	60
1974	51
1975	41
1976	36
1977	31
1978	28
1979	25
1980	21
1981	19
1982	17
1983	17
1984	16

Hot Take-away Food

Mr. Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue from the imposition of value added tax on hot take-away foods (a) during the first six months after the imposition of value added tax on these goods and (b) for the period since the imposition of value added tax on these goods to the latest available date.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 12 November 1984 to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) at column 89.

EC (Contributions and Receipts)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount paid to the European Economic Community and the total amount received in grant since the beginning of the financial year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Advance Payments)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why he has presented two separate Supplementary Estimates for £99 million and £265 million respectively, for advance payments to the Common Market; and on what basis they have been calculated as representing one month's payment of European Economic Community own resources other than value added tax own-resources.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Authorities (Borrowing)

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the additional financial costs to local authorities' borrowing expenditure, pursuant to his decision relating to tax assessment on bond washing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The effect of the decision relating to bondwashing on the overall borrowing costs of local authorities is likely to be insignificant. Most forms of local authority borrowing, in particular from the Public Works Loan Board and from the money market, are not affected at all. Local authority borrowing through the issue of bonds represents a very small proportion of their total borrowing. To the extent that the cost of borrowing through the issue of bonds may rise, local authorities can of course obtain funds for periods of one year and above at highly competitive rates from the Public Works Loan Board, and from the money market for shorter periods.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that any report sent to him by Price Waterhouse or by the City police fraud squad into the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bankers will be published.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Economic and Finance Council Meeting

Mr. Rowe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Community Economic and Finance Council in Brussels on 11 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers met in Brussels on 11 March. I represented the United Kingdom. This was the first occasion on which the ECOFIN Council has implemented the budgetary discipline procedures and at which the Court of Auditors report has been discussed.

Following the Council's discussion of future financial provision for the European agricultural guidance fund, it formally adopted an opinion, in accordance with the arrangements laid down on budgetary discipline, that the total amount to be made available for expenditure commitments to be charged to the guidance fund for the next five years should be limited to 5,250 million ecus. The 5,250 mecus figure agreed is substantially lower than the figure of 5,716 mecus requested by the Commission in February and than their original proposal of 5,900 mecus. This figure is without prejudice to any decisions which may subsequently be taken on the Commission's proposals for integrated Mediterranean programmes. The Council reviewed the economic situation and decided to make no changes to the economic policy guidelines agreed in December 1984.

At the request of the United Kingdom the Council discussed the report of the Court of Auditors on the execution of the Community Budget for 1983. The Council agreed that further work was needed on the deficiencies identified in the Court's report, in particular the excessive build-up of unused payment appropriations and of unused commitments, the need for improved monitoring and control of FEOGA guarantee and for more rapid disbursement of food aid. The Council invited the Committee of Permanent Representatives to consider the necessary follow-up action and to report back to a subsequent meeting of the Finance or Budget Council.

The Council discussed the draft 20th VAT directive, permitting the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany to give special aid to its farmers as agreed at Fontainebleau. The Council decided to ask the European Parliament to give its opinion on the draft directive as a matter of urgency and to continue its own work on the subject.

The Commission notified the Council of its request for a new negotiating mandate on mixed credits in preparation for negotiations in the OECD. Nine Member States, including the United Kingdom, supported the Commission's request, which will be further discussed at the General Affairs Council on 17-19 March.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions during each of the last five years customs investigations have commenced into the commission of drug-related offences by people who have at the time of apprehension or theft claimed diplomatic immunity; what effect these claims of immunity have had on the seizure of drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 60]: Customs and Excise investigators were faced with claims to diplomatic immunity at the time of commencement of investigation into drug-related offences as follows:

1980 on six occasions
1981 and 1982 no occasions
1983 on two occasions
1984 on two occasions

In each case, Customs maintained the seizure of the drugs.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have paid corporation tax of over (a) £100,000, (b) £500,000, (c) £1 million and (d) £5 million in each of the last five fiscal years.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 58]: Broad estimates for the most recent year for which figures are available are:

(a) 5,000
(b) 1,300
(c) 700
(d) over 100

These estimates are very tentative, and I regret that figures for each of the last five years could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of (a) gross trading profits and (b) net trading profits was paid by all industries in corporation tax for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 58]: The percentages are as follows:

	Gross trading profits	Net trading profits
1975-76	16	32
1976-77	20	50
1977-78	20	42
1978-79	17	33
1979-80	18	38
1980-81	16	33
1981-82	17	41
1982-83	19	46
1983-84	18	42
1984-85	20	35

Gross trading profits are net of losses and are based upon national accounts estimates but after adjustment for net interest flow. For North Sea companies oil tax accruals (royalty PRT and SPD) have been deducted. Net trading profits are gross trading profits less capital allowances claimed, not all of which can be set against profits in the same year; the allowances claimed usually exceed commercial depreciation. Corporation tax receipts in each financial year have been expressed as a percentage of profits in the previous calendar year.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of net trading profits was paid in corporation tax by (a) agriculture, (b) energy and water supply, (c) extraction and chemicals, (d) metal goods and engineering and (e) other manufacturing industries in the last fiscal year for which statistics are available;

(2) what percentage of net trading profits was paid in corporation tax by (a) construction, (b) distribution and repairs, (c) hotels and catering, (d) transport and communications, (e) banking, finance and insurance, (f) business services, (g) other services and (h) overseas industries in the last fiscal year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 25 February 1985, c. 58]: The most recent reasonably reliable estimates related to profits arising in 1980; and can be disaggregated only for the following sectors:

Corporation tax receipts in 1981-82 as a percentage of net trading profits† in 1980 (private sector only)*

	per cent.
Manufacturing	45
Distribution and repairs, hotels and catering	50
Banking, finance and insurance	50
North sea companies‡	25
Other industrial and commercial companies	50

* These percentages have been affected by transfers of losses across years and across sectors and by ACT payments covering more than one sector.

† Gross trading profits as recorded for tax purposes, ie after deduction of short term interest (except for North Sea companies—see ‡), less capital depreciation allowances.

‡ Corporation tax charge, before set off of advance corporation tax, as a proportion of net trading profits gross of interest payments, net of petroleum revenue tax and royalties. The total tax charge, including petroleum revenue tax and royalties, amounted to 65 per cent. of net trading profits, gross of interest payments, in 1980.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Grain Stocks

10. Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current estimated level of grain in store in England and Wales.

Mr. MacGregor: There were 2·7 million tonnes of wheat and 0·6 million tonnes of barley in intervention stores in England and Wales on 13 March 1985. Comparable information is not available on stocks held on farms or in private stores.

Agricultural Prices

14. Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what increased expenditure will result from the Commission's European Economic Community agricultural price proposals.

Mr. Jopling: The Commission estimates its proposals will add 138 million ecu to expenditure in 1985 but produce a saving of 34 million ecu in 1986.

Halvergate Marshes (Drainage Payments)

15. Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of farmers to whom money for land drainage in the Halvergate levels area has been disbursed.

Mrs. Fenner: Since 1 October 1980, when the present capital grant schemes were introduced, three farmers have received grant for field drainage in the area stipulated.

Sugar Cane

16. Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning negotiations for enlargement of the European Economic Community in respect of cane sugar refining.

Mr. MacGregor: It is too early to say what the final outcome will be of current negotiations between Portugal and the Community on the arrangements to apply after accession for raw sugar supplies to the Portuguese refining industry. The Government's main concern is that the arrangements should not disrupt supplies to existing Community refiners.

Horses and Ponies

17. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to introduce changes to the law relating to tethered horses and ponies.

Mrs. Fenner: We have no such plans.

Landscape and Wildlife Conservation

18. Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for landscape and wildlife conservation of the European Economic Community's 1985-86 farm price proposals.

Mrs. Fenner: I would expect that the changes implied by the Commission's proposals for CAP prices 1985-86 would have only a very small impact on the environment; that impact, however would be likely to be favourable.

Agricultural Production (Targets)

19. Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will draw up a medium-term plan for the agriculture industry to include levels of production targets in the light of the European Economic Community surpluses.

Mr. MacGregor: I do not believe that the setting of overall production targets is the right way to proceed. Guarantee thresholds, under which production in excess of defined levels triggers off reductions in support, and which now apply to many more commodities, are one of the most important ways of tackling the surpluses.

Milk Quotas

20. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from dairy farmers whose preliminary allocation of secondary milk quota has on appeal been reduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have received representations from a number of producers in this position. But all producers were warned before lodging their appeals that the tribunal could reduce awards made by local panels. The tribunal has a duty to amend panels' awards where necessary.

24. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the progress made towards the introduction of flexibility into milk quota arrangements.

Mr. Jopling: The February Agriculture Council reached agreement on flexibility between direct sale and wholesale quotas. This was our first objective and it is a major improvement.

A number of organisations have urged the need for arrangements to enable quotas to be bought and sold separately from land. This would certainly have attractions though, as has been widely recognised, there would be a problem about providing for landlords' interests in quotas. I do not, however, see a system of this sort being immediately negotiable in the Community while the quota scheme itself is still being put in place.

Some flexibility would be introduced if quotas not required by one producer could be temporarily re-allocated to another through a system of leasing. My officials are consulting the interests concerned about the details of such a scheme and I intend to pursue this possibility with the Commission.

25. Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the future management of milk quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have received numerous representations. A great many will, I am glad to say, be resolved as a result of the package agreed at the February Agriculture Council.

Eastern Bloc Countries (Trade)

21. Mr. Walden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of trade in agricultural produce between the United Kingdom and the Eastern bloc countries.

Mrs. Fenner: Including items such as farm machinery and pesticides, the United Kingdom's agriculture and food exports to the USSR and the six other East European countries totalled some £200 million in 1984, compared with imports from these countries of about £80 million.

Surplus Food and Wine

22. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total sum spent by the European Economic Community in storing and disposing of surplus food and wine in 1984; and if he will express this in a sum per day.

Mr. MacGregor: Final figures for expenditure in 1984 are not yet available, but the budgetary provision for storing and disposing of stocks of commodities which are in structural surplus (cereals, sugar, wine, milk and beef) was £7,188 million or about £20 million a day.

Surplus Produce (Disposal)

23. Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present arrangements for disposing of surplus agricultural produce; what are the main uses to which such surpluses are put; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The main outlets for existing surpluses of agricultural products are by export on to world markets with the use of export refunds, by the incorporation in animal feed with the help of subsidies, and in the case of wine, by distillation into alcohol. There are also a number of other special schemes for surplus disposal. The Government's objective is to achieve improvements in the operation of the CAP so that the production of costly surpluses is avoided.

Outgoers Scheme

26. Sir Hector Monro asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much quota has been surrendered under the outgoers scheme to date.

Mr. Jopling: To date, producers have committed themselves to surrender 223·1 million litres of quota (on a full year basis) in the United Kingdom as a whole.

39. Mr. Knox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress made on the outgoers scheme for dairy farmers.

Mr. Jopling: To date, invitations have been sent to 4,200 producers in England and Wales. by 8 March, 1,360 producers had decided to go out of production and they will, on a full year basis, surrender a total of 190 million litres. As other producers come to make their decisions, some will no doubt drop out thereby allowing offers to be made to others. I have no reason to suppose that we will not be able to reach our target of 289 million litres.

Surplus Grain

27. Mr. Wareing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy towards proposals for the conversion of surplus European Economic Community grain into plastic and other non-food materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are always prepared to consider the merits of new uses for grain but we would have to be convinced that a project involving the conversion of grain into plastic or other non-food materials was viable.

Spanish Fishing Vessels

28. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of fishing by Spanish vessels in waters around the British Isles.

Mr. MacGregor: Spain is entitled to fish in certain waters of European Community member states under the EC-Spain fisheries agreement 1980. Under the arrangements agreed for 1985 Spain's fishing around the British Isles is limited to her fishery for hake and associated by-catch species in waters to the west of Scotland, in the English Channel and south-west approaches, and to the south and west of Ireland, and is restricted in terms of the number of vessels and the quantities of fish which may be caught. Spain is currently allocated a total of 65 standard vessel licences for her hake fishery in these areas and we understand that all these licences are currently taken up.

During 1984 a number of Spanish vessels were prosecuted for fishing without a valid licence in these waters, although only a minority of these were found fishing in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the Spanish fishing vessels which have been arrested in United Kingdom waters in the last three years and give their home ports; where cases against them were heard; and what were the penalties imposed.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the following table; it includes details of the two Spanish vessels arrested so far this year.

Name of vessel	Home port	Where case heard	Penalty
1982
Ensenada de Pintens	Gijon	Plymouth	£10,000 fine plus £276.50 costs
Playa de Agueta	Gijon	Plymouth	£16,200 fine plus £1,355 costs and net confiscated
Manuel Perez Pan	Vigo	Plymouth	£450 fine plus £270 costs and cod end of net confiscated
Nurvo Area Gil	Vigo	Falmouth	£9,500 fine plus £250 costs and catch 2 trawls confiscated
Jose Antonio Y Manuel	Vigo	Falmouth	£4,500 fine plus £200 costs and undersized catch and net confiscated
Garsa	Vigo	Falmouth	£3,750 fine plus £200 costs and undersized catch and net confiscated

Ategorrieta	San Sebestian	Falmouth	£30,000 fine plus £375 costs and catch and gear confiscated

Milk Production

29. Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the United Kingdom's present production of milk exceeds its domestic consumption.

Mr. MacGregor: Production of milk in the United Kingdom substantially more than meets our requirements for liquid consumption. Taking account of other outlets for milk in addition to liquid consumption it is possible to calculate for the two main components of milk ratios of self sufficiency. The Milk Marketing Board estimates, that for 1983 these were 91 per cent. for butterfat and 117 per cent. for solids not fat. Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

EC Structures Directive

30. Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current state of negotiations on a new European Economic Community structures directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: As I announced yesterday, the Council of Agriculture Ministers reached agreement on the new structures policy earlier this week.

Common Agricultural Policy

31. Mr. Marlow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the cost of the common agricultral policy for 1983 and 1984 and give his latest estimate for 1985.

Mr. Jopling: Expenditure on the common agricultural policy in 1983 amounted to 16,634 mecu. Final figures for 1984 expenditure are not yet available but the supplementary and amending budget No. 1 for 1984 made provision for CAP expenditure of 19,121 mecu. The 1985 budget has not yet been adopted.

Research (Departmental Support)

32. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that his Department gives adequate support to programmes of research which are in the national interest.

Mr. Jopling: In determining research priorities Agriculture Ministers and the Agricultural and Food Research Council are advised by the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food. In addition to the funds provided by the Exchequer to support the research programme we shall be encouraging industry to make a greater contribution towards the research and development from which it benefits.

Food Labelling

33. Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will include in his plans for the labelling of packaged foods a requirement that the carbohydrate content should be listed.

Mrs. Fenner: As my right hon. Friend announced on 12 March, we propose to circulate for comment draft guidelines on nutrition labelling of food, which includes the declaration of carbohydrate content.

38. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the introduction of nutritional food labelling.

Mrs. Fenner: Representatives of the food industry have asked the Government to consider the possibility of introducing full nutrition labelling of food and some discussions with them have taken place. Comments upon the idea have also been received from a number of organisations. Any proposals for the introduction of nutrition labelling will be subject to full consultation.

Spain and Portugal (British Farm Products)

34. Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is planning to assist the export of British farm products to Spain and Portugal after their entry into the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Fenner: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food intends to visit these two countries at an early opportunity when trade will be among the subjects he hopes to discuss. After entry, their markets will become progressively more open to United Kingdom produce during a transitional period. We are confident that our exporters will be in a position to take advantage of the new opportunities with help from Food from Britain and the British Agricultural Export Council and the British Overseas Trade Board's services.

Milk (Fat Content)

35. Mr. Key asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to alter the level of payments for the fat content of milk.

Mr. MacGregor: In its 1985-86 price proposals, the Commission has proposed an adjustment in the value placed on the butterfat and solids-not-fat parts of milk from the present ratio of 50:50 to 47·15:52·85. This would affect the various support mechanisms for milk and milk products, in particular the levels of intervention prices.

In the United Kingdom the arrangements for compositional payments to producers for the milk they supply to the milk marketing boards, and the degree to which they reflect changes in the Community's support arrangements, are for the boards to decide.

Forestry Commission

36. Sir Dudley Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the performance of the Forestry Commission in safeguarding the woodlands of England and Wales.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes. I am satisfied that the Forestry Commission is taking active measures to safeguard woodland, both through its felling licence controls and in developing policy initiatives to encourage positive and sympathetic management of the country's broadleaved woodlands.

Less Favoured Areas

37. Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government have any plans to make further assistance available for less favoured areas.

Mr. Jopling: The overall level of support to farmers in the less favoured areas is kept under careful review. I have already announced that I intend to provide new assistance for farm tourism and craft industry in these areas when the new EC structures regulation is implemented.

Grain Production

40. Mr. Yeo asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the amount by which grain production in Britain exceeded demand in 1984.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom cereals production in 1984 is estimated at 26·5 million tonnes. Home demand (of which some 2·4 million tonnes is likely to be met by imports) in the 1984-85 crop year is forecast at 19·4 million tonnes. Export demand cannot be accurately forecast but exports in the first seven months of the crop year had reached nearly 4 million tonnes.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

41. Mr. Bruce asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the likely effects of recent cuts in expenditure on the Farm Advisory Service.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Government Purchasing

42. Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes following the conclusions of the recent report by the Management and Personnel Office on Government purchasing.

Mr. Jopling: I have appointed a small internal team, and a part-time commercial adviser, to consider how the conclusions of this report might assist towards achieving better value for money from my Department's expenditure on purchasing.

Cereals

43. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has agreed with the European Economic Community to curb overproduction of cereals.

Mr. MacGregor: While pursuing a restrictive price policy, the Community has not adopted any measure designed to curb the volume of cereals production directly. We shall continue to press in the current Council meetings on this year's price proposals for a policy of price restraint as the best means of securing a better balance in the cereals market.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the measures taken subsequent to the agriculture package of 31 March 1984 to curb the production of cereals; how effective they have proved in practice; and what steps the Government are now taking to ensure that expenditure on cereals under the common agricultural policy is reduced.

Mr. MacGregor: The Community has not adopted any measure designed to curb the volume of cereals production directly. Action to reduce expenditure on cereals under the common agricultural policy must be taken at a Community level. While the Government would urge an even more stringent approach, I welcome the European Commission's recognition of the need for a restrictive price policy, and particularly its proposals for a reduction in cereals support prices and the elimination of intervention for breadmaking wheat at the minimum reference price for the next marketing year. These measures would be a useful step towards the objective of reducing expenditure and also of securing a better balance in the cereals market itself.

Milk Producers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether the Government considered a levy on milk producers to help finance the payment of compensation for farmers agreeing to give up milk production;

(2) what proposals the Government will put forward in the European Economic Community to ensure that farmers who continue to produce milk do not profit as a result of the introduction of quotas.

Mr. MacGregor: At a time when dairy farmers are having to accept the restraints involved in cutting milk production to bring it closer to demand, I do not think that the action suggested by the hon. Member would be appropriate.

New Zealand Lamb

Mr. Freeman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what volume and value of imports of New Zealand lamb arrived in the United Kingdom during 1984.

Mr. MacGregor: According to United Kingdom trade statistics 144,000 tonnes of sheepmeat valued at £176 million were imported from New Zealand in 1984.

Pastureland

Mr. Freeman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics he has collected on the number of acres of farmed pastureland in Northamptonshire and nationally for each of the last five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The following information is available from the annual June census:

Total Grassland (hectares) (excluding rough grazing)

	England	Northamptonshire
1980	4,184,084	76,485
1981	4,127,031	74,263
1982	4,058,361	71,219
1983	4,045,160	69,898
1984	3,999,432	68,285

Rough Grazing (hectares) (Sole right)

	England	Northamptonshire
1980	750,431	1,536
1981	741,803	1,581
1982	744,252	1,464
1983	748,529	1,540
1984	740,986	1,261

The figures exclude minor holdings which are not required to complete an annual census return.

Breeding Ewes

Mr. Freeman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics he has collected on the number of farm holdings with breeding ewes, and the total number of breeding ewes, in Northamptonshire and nationally, for each of the last five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of holdings with breeding ewes and the total number of breeding ewes collected in the June census for the last five years are as follows:

	England		Northamptonshire
	Holdings	Breeding ewes	Holdings	Breeding ewes
1980	40,691	6,544,829	891	147,263
1981	40,850	6,699,350	896	150,555
1982	41,537	6,921,372	887	153,171
1983	42,266	7,163,838	897	158,010
1984	42,541	7,261,917	909	160,825

The figures exclude minor holdings which are not required to complete an annual census return.

Confectionery (Indian Community)

Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the volume and value of (a) confectionery manufactured in the United Kingdom for the Indian community and (b) confectionery imported for the Indian community in each year since 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: I regret that the information requested is not separately identified in the official statistics.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984, the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service".

Mr. Jopling: Arrangements which accord with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the code are already in hand following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service". Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working. Women are being encouraged to attend courses —particularly developmental courses—and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available. Use is being made of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women and consideration is being given to whether such courses can be introduced into our departmental training programme.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Freeman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the European Economic Community concerning a change in the sheepmeat regime's seasonal scale of guide prices so as to reduce the rate of fall of the scale during June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: When the scale was first proposed we said problems would arise. After they did so we raised the subject in the Council of Agriculture Ministers last July with particular reference to the fall in June. Since last summer we have made repeated representations on the subject. However, the Commission's proposals for next year's seasonal scale offer no improvements and we shall continue to press for changes which will promote more orderly marketing.

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many cormorants were estimated to exist at each of the locations for which applications were made for licences to kill them in 1984; and how many were permitted to be killed in each location where permission to kill was granted;

(2) on what grounds the six applications to kill cormorants were refused in 1984; and to which parts of the United Kingdom they related;

(3) to which parts of the United Kingdom each of the applications to kill cormorants granted in 1984 related;

(4) why a licence to kill cormorants was issued against the advice of the Nature Conservancy Council;

(5) what was the cost in 1984 of administering the scheme to determine whether or not a licence to kill cormorants will be issued; and what was the cost to public funds per licence;

(6) how long each of the licences issued to kill cormorants lasts;

(7) what was the nature and extent of the damage alleged to have been caused by cormorants in each of the applications for licences to kill the birds;

(8) what definition he uses of (i) serious damage and (ii) serious economic loss in the context of the granting of an application to kill cormorants;

(9) why it is necessary to protect the identity of those who apply for licences to kill cormorants.

Mrs. Fenner: Licences applied for and issued under section 16(1) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the killing of cormorants causing serious damage in England and Wales during 1984 are set out in the table.

Agriculture Departments in England and Wales have agreed with the Nature Conservancy Council that "serious damage" should mean convincing evidence of actual or potential significant economic loss. The degree of economic loss will depend upon the circumstances of the particular case.

Details of each licence application are passed to the Nature Conservancy Council for its views, but it is for Agriculture Ministers to decide on the issue of a licence, taking account of all the circumstances.

Licence applications are treated in confidence, but the Nature Conservancy Council is free to pass details of any case to any responsible body with an interest. Licence applicants are so informed.

The cost of administering the issue of all licences under section 16(1) of the 1981 Act is borne within the general administrative and ADAS Votes of the Department concerned. To obtain information specifically about cormorant licensing at this stage could only incur disproportionate cost.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Licences applied for and issued for the killing of cormorants causing damage in England and Wales during 1984

Fishing Industry

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the various schemes of assistance available from the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community for the United Kingdom fishing industry.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows:

SCHEMES OF ASSISTANCE FOR THE UNITED KINGDOM FISHING INDUSTRY

The Fishing Vessels (Acquisition and Improvement) (Grants) Scheme 1981 (as amended).

—Grants towards the construction of new fishing vessels and the modernisation of existing ones.

Regulation (EEC) No. 2908/83

—Grants in addition to national aids for the purchase or construction of new fishing vessels, or for the modernisation or conversion of existing ones, of between 9 and 33 metres in length.

The Fishing Vessels (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983 and Directive (EEC) 83/515

—Grants for the laying up or decommissioning of fishing vessels and for exploratory voyages and joint ventures.

The Fish Producers' Organisations (Formation Grants) Scheme 1982 and Regulation (EEC) No. 3796/81

—Grants in respect of the initial administrative expenses for Producers' Organisations.

The Fisheries Act 1981 provides for loans to be made available for the construction or re-engining of fishing vessels and for acquiring, reconditioning or improving plant for ice-making or processing sea fish.

The Fisheries Act 1955 provides for grants to be made available for harbour improvement to public authorities and other similar bodies in Great Britain where such assistance will promote the maintenance or development of the fishing industry. For Northern Ireland, grants are available under the Harbour Act (NI) 1970 to persons improving, maintaining or managing a harbour or carrying out harbour operations.

The Sea Fish Industry Authority also provides assistance in various forms to the United Kingdom industry generally.

Under the common organisation of the market in fishery products varying forms of support are available for certain designated species of fish. These include financial compensation for fish withdrawn from the human consumption market and storage aid payments. Payments are made by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and reimbursed by the European Commission.

Regulation (EEC) 355/77 (as amended by Regulation (EEC) 1932/84)

Assistance for processing and marketing of fisheries products.

Details of assistance to fish farming were given in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 14 December 1984 at columns 624-25.

Thames Flood Barrier

Mr. Jessel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the existing arrangements for the operation of the Thames flood barrier provide adequate protection against flooding in Twickenham and Teddington.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Catch Log Books

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the progress made so far in the introduction of catch log books to United Kingdom fishermen.

Mr. MacGregor: EC logbooks and landing-transshipment declarations are due to be introduced on 1 April 1985. The task of distributing logbooks and agreeing the most efficient arrangements for their completion and return from that date began on 21 January. I am satisfied with the progress made so far. This has been made possible by the generally high level of co-operation from all concerned in the industry.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the possible abolition of the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. MacGregor: None.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984, of the programme of action on women in the Civil Service.

Dr. Boyson: The code of practice of the Equal Opportunities Commission will not apply to the Northern Ireland Civil Service. However, in respect of staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service, a new joint management and trade union side equal opportunities committee is monitoring and reviewing all aspects of equal opportunities policy, including those which particularly affect women, such as recruitment, promotion, training, career development and opportunities for part-time working or job sharing.

In light of the committee's deliberations and following further consultation with the Equal Opportunities Commission in Northern Ireland, a document will be issued for the Northern Ireland Civil Service corresponding to the programme of action on women in the Civil Service.

In respect of the Home Civil Service, existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working.

Transport Costs

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will investigate with leaders of business, commerce and the transport industry ways in which they may be able to overcome the high costs of transporting goods to and from Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, of 12 March 1985, c. 125]: I am always ready to give full consideration to suggestions as to how the problems—including transport costs — resulting from Northern Ireland's peripheral location might be alleviated. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the recent report on transport costs in peripheral regions jointly commissioned by the Department of Economic Development, the Industry Department for Scotland and the European Commission, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Norman Shaw North Building

Mr. White asked the Lord Privy Seal how many hon. Members currently have their offices in the Norman Shaw North building; and how this compares with each year since 1975.

Mr. Biffen: One hundred and twenty-one Members currently have offices in the Norman Shaw North building. This compares with 124 in 1975-76, 123 in 1977-79, 122 in 1980-82, and 121 in 1983 and 1984.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Terrorism

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning international terrorism and the discussions he has had with other countries to eradicate it.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 January at column 372. Discussions continue with like minded countries. We hope that the Bonn summit in May may provide a suitable opportunity for further constructive exchanges.

Frontier Relaxations

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning proposed frontier relaxations between France, West Germany and the Benelux countries.

Mr. Luce: The Governments of France, Germany and the Benelux countries are discussing the possibility of progressively relaxing controls at the land frontiers between them, on the lines of the agreement reached last year between France and Germany. We welcome this development. Separate discussions are taking place about making travel easier throughout the Community as a whole.

Agreement for Co-operation on the Safety of Atomic Energy

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of changes incorporated in the amendment to the agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, which had become necessary since the last amendment, Cmnd. 7976, as indicated in his answer of 11 March.

Mr. Luce: The changes incorporated in the latest amendment to the agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes are listed in Cmnd. 9336.

Decade for Women

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now announce who will represent the United Kingdom at the world conference of the United Nations Decade for Women in Nairobi on 15 to 26 July.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom delegation will be led by my noble Friend Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The deputy leader will be Dame Anne Warburton DCVO, CMG, United Kingdom Permanent Representative to the office of the United Nations at Geneva. The delegation will also include my noble Friend Baroness Gardner of Parkes (United Kingdom Representative on the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women), my noble Friend Baroness Platt of Writtle (Chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission), Mrs. Clark-Glass (Chairman of the Northern Ireland Equal Opportunities Commission),

Mrs. Nancy Catchpole (Women's National Commission) and a small number of Government officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Home Office. Representatives from Dependent Territories will also be included.

Human Rights

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will sign the United Nations convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom permanent representative to the United Nations is today signing the United Nations convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

DEFENCE

Boarding School Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Defence, further to the reply of 10 January, Official Report, column 528, concerning departmental expenditure on boarding school allowances, whether such allowances are payable when scholastic instruction is available locally in the English language; and whether he will provide in respect of the armed forces (a) a breakdown showing the numbers of children drawn from each command area receiving an allowance and the number being educated locally and (b) the average cost to the Government of each child educated locally and the corresponding figure for those receiving an allowance, including the cost of visits to parents at the public expense.

Mr. Lee: Boarding school allowance is payable in respect of service children irrespective of whether scholastic instruction is available locally in the English language. In the case of children of parents in the armed forces, the allowance is paid to ensure continuity of education. It is for parents to choose whether to claim the allowance in order to achieve continuity for their children or to have their children with them on their frequent postings at home and abroad and send them to local schools.

(a) Boarding school allowance records are not maintained centrally in the form requested and cannot be obtained without disproportionate effort. In 1983-84, it is estimated that there were some 9,000 children of service parents who were in receipt of an allowance and who were serving abroad. The numbers of children educated in local schools run by the Service Children's Education Authority as at September 1984 were as follows: British Forces Germany 24,855; Cyprus 1,718; Gibraltar 643; Hong Kong 1,844; and Naples 90.

(b) In 1983-84 the average cost to the Government of each child educated locally in schools run by the Service Children's Education Authority is estimated at £2,275. In the same year the estimated average cost of a child of service parents serving overseas who were in receipt of an allowance was £2,516. The cost of visits to parents at the public expense is not separately identifiable.

Tellurometers

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Tellurometers have been purchased and used by the British armed forces.

Mr. Butler: Yes.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements Her Majesty's Government propose to ensure access by United Kingdom companies to technologies developed in the research phase of the United States' Government's strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Butler: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated to my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill) on 26 February 1985, at column 180, it is important that we should keep up with the relevant technologies which span a wide range. We are therefore currently considering, and will be discussing with our United States allies, how best to pursue this. Some British companies are, of course, already closely involved in studies relating to this area.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the programme of action on women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Butler: In accordance with the programme of action, a departmental equal opportunities officer has been appointed with responsibility for co-ordinating the Civil Service policy of non-discrimination within the Ministry of Defence. This officer acts as a focal point for monitoring the equal opportunities policy.

Existing joint management and trades union machinery is being used to review such matters as promotion, selection for training and the incidence of part-time working.

Women are being encouraged to attend courses and to make the maximum use of the training opportunities available. A developmental course for women middle managers is currently being run on a regular basis by this Department's central training division and use is also being made of the Civil Service college course in middle management for women only.

RTM 322 Helicopter Engine

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the progress of the testing of the RTM 322 helicopter engine; and if he will make a report.

Mr. Butler: The progress made so far in testing the RTM 322 has been very encouraging. Initial testing of the first two development engines has been completed, on schedule, by Rolls-Royce Limited and Turbomeca SA. The test objectives were achieved, the performance of the engines meeting the predicted levels.

Royal College of Surgeons (Research)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what research projects have been financed by his Department at the Royal College of Surgeons; and what is the purpose of such projects.

Mr. Lee: It is not our policy to give information of this nature concerning research contracts.

TRANSPORT

M4 (Litter)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his Department's responsibilities in respect of the collection of litter from the grass verges of the M4.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department is responsible for all sweeping and cleansing of motorways. The main concern in exercising that responsibility is to ensure the safety of those using the roads. In addition we periodically clear litter for amenity reasons from verges, central reservations and slopes. The work is carried out on our behalf by agent authorities.

Vehicle Testing

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the way in which he expects the proposed new conditions for his Department's test station authorisation will improve the safety record of the Ministry of Transport garage industry.

Mrs. Chalker: The primary purpose of the new conditions of appointment is to raise the standard of the MOT test. Whilst safety is the responsibility of the garage operator under the surveillance of the Health and Safety Executive or local authority, our proposals aim to follow good practice in so far as they affect the circumstances in which testing is carried out.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport how the proposed changes to his Department's test station layout and dimensions will improve the standards of his Department's testing.

Mrs. Chalker: The changes in test area requirements will contribute to an improved standard of testing by enabling the inspection to be carried out with the vehicle within the test bay, and by ensuring that the tester has adequate space to conduct the examination properly and to use the equipment.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of his Department's testing facilities which will be unable to meet his proposed new requirements for test station authorisation, and may have to close.

Mrs. Chalker: In view of the wide variation in the size and layout of existing testing premises, it is not possible to give an accurate figure for those which will be unable to meet the new requirements. However in view of the relaxations I propose to make, I expect the majority to be able to do so within the five-year period allowed.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the training of his Department's testers.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall be proposing improved arrangements for training MOT testers in the future.

Illegal Parking (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he will give to the introduction of an order to immobilise vehicles illegally parked in Hertfordshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have received no such request to date.

London Regional Transport

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards decentralising the operations of London Regional Transport as required by the London Regional Transport Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have given my approval under section 4 of the Act to proposals submitted by London Regional Transport for the formation by them of two companies, London Buses Limited and London Underground Limited to operate London bus and underground services. These companies will be incorporated as wholly-owned subsidiaries of LRT and will commnce trading on 1 April 1985.

At the same time, under its general powers conferred by section 3(1) of the Act, LRT will be establishing a separate wholly-owned subsidiary, LRT Bus Engineering Limited to provide bus engineering and overhaul facilities.

LBL will be able to bid for bus service contracts with LRT in competition with other suppliers, as has already started. BEL will be required to operate without subsidy as soon as possible and to provide its services to LBL and other operators in competition with other suppliers in the market.

I believe that the establishment of these three companies is a major step towards lower costs, improved efficiency and better value for money for London's public transport passengers. It represents a milestone of achievement in the evolution of LRT.

Moped and Motor Cycle Riders (Training)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what numbers of moped and motor cycle riders, by age group, came forward for training during 1981 and 1983; and if he will give these totals as a proportion of provisional licence holders for both years.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that this information is not available. In 1983, 51,203 motor cyclists took part one of the motor cycle test and a course of training with an appointed training body.

Motor Cyclists (Tests)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the pass rate during 1983 of those motor cyclists taking the part one test with (a) an approved training body and (b) his Department.

Mrs. Chalker: The pass rates were: (a) 93 per cent. and (b) 50 per cent.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the part two pass rate during 1983 of those motor cyclists passing part one of the driving test with (a) each of the approved training bodies and (b) his Department.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that the information is not available. For 1984, the average pass rate of motor cyclists taking part two for the first time, having passed part one with an appointed training body, was 74 per cent.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide information on the average length of time taken by motor cyclists between passing part one and taking or passing part two of the driving test.

Mrs. Chalker I regret that this information is not available.

Motor Cycles (Provisional Licences)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the number and proportion of motor cycle provisional licences issued from 1 October 1982 which have been (a) replaced by a full licence and (b) allowed to lapse.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that this information is not readily available.

Sailing Vessel Marques (Inquiry)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the loss of the sailing vessel Marques.

Mr. David Mitchell I have just received a report of this inquiry and am considering its recommendation. I shall make a further statement shortly.

Railway Passenger Services

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has been informed by the Transport Users' Consultative Committee of any objections to the proposed discontinuation of all railway passenger services on the line between Henley-in-Arden and Bearley junction; and whether an inquiry will be held.

Mr. David Mitchell The Transport Users Consultative Committee for the west midlands has informed my Right hon. Friend that it has received objections to British Rail's proposal to close the line between Henley-in-Arden and Bearley junction. Under the statutory closure procedures laid down in the Transport Act 1962 the committee will report to my right hon. Friend on any hardship it considers closure would cause. I understand that the committee hopes to hold a public hearing later this year.

Missing Vessels

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply of 5 March to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, he will give the last known or reported location of each missing vessel; and whether activity of submarines of any nationality was reported to the inquiry in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c.51].

Such information as is available about the last location of each vessel is given below:

MV Derbyshire 270 miles East of Okinawa
FV Pat Marie 1 mile South East of Benacre Ness
FV Celerity In Pentland Firth
FV Reborn Under the cliffs, East of Folkestone Harbour
FV Zanto Off the West Coast of Denmark
FV Exuberant Between Weymouth and Dartmouth; possibly off Portland Bill
FV South Stack Between Anglesey and the Isle of Man

In only one of these casualties, the Exuberant, was any report of possible submarine activity made to the inquiry and in that case it was established that no submarine was known to be in the area at the time.

ENERGY

Standing Charges

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has recently received from pensioners and pensioner organisations regarding the continuation of public utility standing charges.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have received a number of representations on electricity and gas standing charges from pensioners and pensioner organisations this year. Standing charges for water and telephone services are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Trade and Industry, respectively.

Petrol and Diesel Prices

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies his Department has made of the contribution which higher receipts to crude oil producers, consequent upon the rise in the United States dollar—pound sterling exchange rate, can now make towards stabilising or reducing petrol prices to the consumer.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Oil is traded world-wide; its price is determined by the balance of market supply and demand. Over the past year this has led to some fall in the dollar price of crude oil. Petrol is also a freely traded commodity, subject to competitive forces, overseas and in the United Kingdom, which have led to increases in sterling prices in recent months. Prices of crude oil and petrol can only be related to each other through trade and competition.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies his Department has made of the movements in petrol prices over the last six months; and what estimates he has made on the impact of movements in the United States dollar—pound sterling exchange rate on retail petrol and diesel prices.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Petrol prices in the United Kingdom rose by 15 pence per gallon (8 per cent.) on average over the six months to mid March. During the same period the dollar rose by 16·5 per cent. against sterling. The exchange rate is only one of many influences bearing on the process of competition which determines petrol prices in the United Kingdom.

North Sea Oil

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates his Department has made of the impact on changes in the United States dollar—pound sterling exchange rate on the gross returns of oil companies producing crude oil in the North sea over the last six months to 1 March.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My Department does not make estimates of the gross returns or receipts to oil companies involved in UKCS production over any six-monthly period. It is concerned with the returns to individual fields over their production life. The influence of recent exchange rate movements on the Department's calculations can only be considered in the context of the productive life of the field.

Sellafield (Solid Waste)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much of the plutonium in the solid waste at Sellafield originated in the Central Electricty Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board Magnox reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: About half of the plutonium in solid wastes at Sellafield orginated from spent fuel from the United Kingdom generating boards' Magnox reactors.

Energy Policy

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends introducing a White Paper on energy policy.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government's energy policy has been stated on many occasions.

SCOTLAND

Broadleaved Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names and areas of those broadleaved woodlands which his Department confirmed to the Forestry Commission would make a significant contribution to the viability and economy of the agricultural holding concerned if clearfelled and converted to agriculture in the years 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 to date, respectively.

Mr.John MacKay: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 to date officials from his Department confirmed to the Forestry Commission that a proposal to clearfell a broadleaved woodland and convert it to agriculture would make a significant contribution to the viability and economy of the agricultural holding concerned.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Clearfelled Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names, areas and principal tree species of each of the woodlands clearfelled under felling licence and subsequently converted to agriculture in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 to date, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mental Deficiency Nurse Staffing Project

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to report and make decisions on the information gained from the pilot study carried out into the mental deficiency nurse staffing project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The information from the pilot study is now being collated, but a report is not expected before the summer.

South of Scotland Electricity Board (Tendering)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the tendering procedure undertaken by the South of Scotland Electricity Board for the transport of coal from Knockshinnoch to Longannet; if he will instruct the board to retender if there has been any failure to follow prescribed tendering procedures or if the contract has not been awarded to the lowest suitable tenderer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Secretary of State does not prescribe tendering procedures since that is a matter for the board. I am advised that the board's formally approved procedures, which are also subject to independent audit, were complied with in this case.

"Broadleaves in Britain"

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Forestry Commission plans to hold further meetings about the "Broadleaves in Britain" review, before 8 May with any of the following: Timber Growers UK, the Institute of Chartered Foresters, the National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Association, the Association of District Councils, the Nature Conservancy Council, the Countryside Commission, the Countryside Commission for Scotland, and the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors.

Mr. John MacKay: It may be necessary for the Forestry Commission to have discussions with Timber Growers UK, the Country Landowners Association, the Nature Conservancy Council and the two Countryside Commissions about particular aspects of the development of the draft policy proposals to be discussed at the seminar on 8 May.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police (Shooting)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on an incident in Islington, London, on 2 March, in which a man was shot by the police; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has already called for a report and will study it carefully when he receives it.

Firearms

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the criteria by which chief constables issue licences under the Firearms Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Firearms Act 1968 itself sets out the considerations which a chief officer of police is required to take into account before issuing a firearms certificate, and we have no plans at present to bring forward amending legislation. The administration of the Act has been reviewed by a working party which reported in April 1984 and recommended standardised procedures for adoption by all forces. The report of the working party was circulated to chief officers of police under cover of Home Office circular No. 47/1984, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Prisons Control Review Committee

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing the report of the Prisons Control Review Committee.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to make a statement about our progress in the next couple of months.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the actual and potential number of student attendances at classes and groups in Holloway prison in (a) the education unit, (b) the skills training unit and (c) the mother and baby unit in the most recent convenient week.

Mr. Mellor: For the week beginning Monday 11 February 1985, the information available is as follows:

Police Tactical Aid Groups

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines exist, or what advice his Department gives, on the use of police tactical aid groups in conjunction with (a) industrial disputes, including picket duty, (b) demonstrations and (c) student demonstrations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department has issued no advice on the use of such units in these circumstances.

British Crime Survey

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to publish the findings of the follow-up study of the British crime survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No, but we expect to do so in about two months when the analysis is complete.

Mr. Ralph L. Moss

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has completed its investigation into the loss or disappearance of the personal possessions of Ralph L. Moss, who is currently held at HM remand centre, deport block, Ashford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: When it was discovered early in January that property belonging to Mr. Moss had apparently disappeared from Ashford remand cente, the police were asked to investigate. I understand that a report on the investigation is expected to be submitted shortly, and I will communicate with the hon. and learned Member when the results are available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Non-Clinical Scientists

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to establish a career structure offering continuity for non-clinical basic scientists engaged in medical research.

Mr. Brooke: The terms of employment of research staff are matters for employees and their representatives and for the university or other employing body.

A-level Passes

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a list of local education authorities in order of achievement, according to the number of A-level passes obtained, expressed as a percentage of the total number which could have been obtained; and if he will include in the compilation of the list figures relating to tertiary colleges of education as well as secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The information is shown in the table.

ENVIRONMENT

Law Centres

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his policy towards the use of urban aid for law centres; and whether he consults the Lord Chancellor about the support given by his Department for legal advice on law centres.

Sir George Young: Ministerial guidelines for the urban programme accord first priority to projects designed to strengthen local economies, and in particular to capital schemes. The urban programme is, however, wide-ranging and does provide revenue funding for projects tackling social problems, including law centres. Urban programme revenue funding is always for a limited period in the expectation that if a project is successful it will subsequently find support from local authority main programmes or elsewhere. Each application from a law centre is considered on its merits against other bids for the use of limited resources. The Lord Chancellor's Department is consulted when new bids for urban programme support for law centres are put forward by sponsoring local authorities.

Lambeth (Youth Training Scheme)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will disregard for penalty purposes expenditure by Lambeth council in support of mode B youth training schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I shall consider any representations to this effect that I receive from the council.

Inner City Partnerships

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he monitors how many projects collapse within 12 months of becoming time-expired under the inner city partnerships in cases where the project is not subsequently supported by a local authority.

Sir George Young: The Department carries out an annual survey of time-expired urban programme projects. At the end of 1983-84, within all the partnership and programme authorities, only two time-expired voluntary sector projects for which renewed urban programme support was sought and refused failed subsequently to receive local authority funding. The survey did not investigate what happened to these projects.

House of Commons (Maintenance)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the costs for 1983-84, and the estimated costs for 1984-85 and 1985-86, of maintaining the House, divided between building repairs, general services, and furniture and equipment.

Sir George Young: The Property Services Agency's records do not readily identify the precise costs attributable to individual buildings forming the parliamentary estate, nor do they distinguish between costs for the two Houses. The following figures accordingly relate to the parliamentary estate as a whole:

Building alteration works	1,485	950	1,203

Fuel and utilities	855	950	976
Rents	290	288	338
Total	9,299	9,199	8,672

* Actual.

Local Government Employees

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 25 February Official Report, column 61, if he will give details of total employee pay and associated costs, including cost of office accommodation, heating, lighting, and other associated costs, for local government white collar and manual employees, for each of the years 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84; and if he will show for each year the average cost per employee.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information is not available centrally about the costs of office accommodation, heating, lighting and other costs associated with employees.

Town and Country Planning (Compensation) Bill

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation analogous to that contained in the Town and Country Planning (Compensation) Bill to extend to all other types of property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The provisions of the Town and Country Planning Bill, which remove compensation rights under section 169 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, have been limited to extensions to blocks of flats, because these are the cases where there is clear evidence that compensation rights are currently being abused. Any evidence of similar abuse which is produced during the passage of the Bill through Parliament will be carefully considered.

Radon Gas

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his assessment of the amount of radon gas present in a dwelling in (a) Sellafield, (b) north Bedfordshire and (c) Cornwall.

Sir George Young: Preliminary estimates by the national radiological protection board, based on its current surveys of dwellings in the United Kingdom, are that the levels in Cumbria are about the same as the average for the United Kingdom as a whole; in north Bedfordshire about half the average; and in Cornwall generally about four times the average. No measurements of radon levels have been made in dwellings in the immediate area of Sellafield, but NRPB has not identified any factors there which would be expected to lead to levels significantly different to those in the rest of Cumbria.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has carried out into the effect of double glazing and stone floors in dwellings in which radon gas accumulates.

Sir George Young: Research on radon gas accumulation by the Building Research Establishment of my Department and by the NRPB has not specifically addressed the influence of these two factors. However, the surveys of dwellings in the United Kingdom currently being undertaken by NRPB may provide useful information. In terms of current knowledge, the material from which floors are constructed and the nature of glazing are not likely to have overriding significance in determining radon levels.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the steps the Government propose to take to carry out the recommendations on radon gas formulated in paragraph 5.49 of the Royal Commission's report on environmental pollution Tenth report.

Sir George Young: The position remains as set out in paragraphs 53 and 54 of "Controlling Pollution: Principles and Prospects: the Government's response to the Tenth Report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution" (pollution paper no. 22), which was published on 13 December 1984 and is in the Library.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities engaged in formulating their case against a nuclear waste depository at Elstow and the other sites to be announced will be permitted to treat such outlays or part thereof as expenditure not subject to penalty for the purpose of local government grant.

Mr. William Waldegrave All Costs incurred by a local authority in opposing any proposals for development will count towards that authority's total expenditure. We have not so far been persuaded of the case for disregarding any such expenditure for the purposes of calculating any holdback of block grant. My right hon. Friend will however reconsider the representations he has received on this matter in relation to possible sites for nuclear waste, and any new representations, before he takes further decisions on grant abatement for the relevant financial year.

Radionuclides (Report)

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Atomic Energy Authority proposes to report on the study it has undertaken into the behaviour of radionuclides in geological formations beyond repositories; and whether its findings will be disclosed to the public.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is carrying out a number of research projects, under contract to my Department, on the behaviour of radionuclides in geological formations. Some will be completed this summer, and the remainder in the first half of next year. In addition, my Department publishes an annual report summarising the results from all research undertaken as part of its radioactive waste management research programme. Copies of the annual reports are in the Library of the House. Reports on these projects will be made publicly available by my Department through the British Library Lending Division, as has already happened with previous projects in the same programme.

London Docklands

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has examined the possibility of declaring the area covered by the London Docklands Development Corporation a simplified planning zone.

Sir George Young: No, the powers to declare a simplified planning zone do not exist. The consultation paper my right hon. Friend issued last year on how such zones might operate provoked widespread comment which my right hon. Friend is at present considering. My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly.

Rate Support Grant (Manchester)

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the leader and representatives of Manchester city council regarding the rate support grant for that city; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Waldegrave: Manchester city council was one of the 26 authorities, including 17 rate-limited authorities, represented at a collective meeting with my right hon. Friend on 4 February. The outcome of those discussions was recorded in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 6 February at column 621.

Planning Authorities

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of fees paid to planning authorities for applications; and how much of this cost is covered not by charges, but by subsidy.

Mr. Macfarlane: The current scale of fees is laid down in the Town and Country Planning (Fees for Applications and Deemed Applications) Regulations 1983. Fees are estimated to raise a total revenue of about £32·3 million in the present financial year, as a contribution towards the overall costs of development control to local authorities of about £73 million.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase his Department's grant to the British Waterways Board by an amount equivalent to the cost of work on the route to Rhodesia section of the Chesterfield canal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. The British Waterways Board uses grant-aid from my Department to meet statutorily defined standards for maintenance of their network. This section of the canal is classified as a remainder waterway, and is therefore maintained to minimum standards.

Additional funding for maintenance to higher standards must come from other sources.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the £76·4 million provided in 1985-86 for derelict land reclamation will be spent on reclaiming landfill sites.

Mr. Macfarlane: There is no specific allocation for the reclamation of landfill sites in the 1985-86 derelict land programme. Applications for grant in respect of such sites will be considered on their merits, but grant will not normally be available for those which are subject to restoration conditions.

Refuse Disposal (Costs)

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to which local authority has the highest cost per tonne of refuse disposal, and which has the lowest; and if he will give the figures.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in its publication "Waste Disposal Statistics". Its "1983-84 Actuals" contain the latest available figures for English waste disposal authorities and show that Buckinghamshire had the lowest net revenue cost per tonne of £1·54, and Berkshire the highest at £15·62; costs were not available for the Greater London council or for Cambridgeshire. However the "1982-83 Actuals" did include figures for the GLC, and showed that they were the third highest for that period.

Leaseholders (Insurance)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will introduce legislation to prohibit freeholders from prescribing a sole insurer or sole broker for the insurance of the building by the leaseholder; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to prohibit proceedings being taken by a freeholder for the forfeiture of a lease on the grounds that the leaseholder has failed to insure the property with an insurance company, or through an insurance agency, prescribed by the freeholder; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government have no proposals for legislation on the insurance of leasehold residential property at this stage. As regards flats, the committee that my hon. Friend the Minister of Housing and Construction established under the chairmanship of Mr. Edward Nugee QC, is looking at a wide range of management problems, including insurance. Its recommendations may have implications for other forms of residential property. Most leaseholders living in houses can enfranchise under the terms of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 (as amended) if they wish to free themselves from obligations regarding insurance arising in connection with their lease.

PRIME MINISTER

Community Service

Mr. Irving asked the Prime Minister what consideration the Government have given to the extension of community service; whether the Government have commissioned any estimate of costings of various community service options; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Community service schemes are available to courts throughout England and Wales. In all areas, except Humberside, these schemes have been or will be extended next month to cover offenders aged 16 and over. In Scotland, schemes for offenders aged 16 or over are available to sheriff courts serving four fifths of the population and we hope for further extensions. Schemes for offenders aged 17 and over are available to courts throughout Northern Ireland.

The schemes are administered locally and vary according to local needs and circumstances, as would alternative options and their costs. The Government believe that the schemes are administered in an effective and imaginative manner, and do not see a need to commission centrally any studies such as my hon. Friend has in mind.

WALES

Local Authority Manpower

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 31 March of each of the years 1974 to 1984 together with the latest available figures, the number of local authority employees in Wales, analysed by part-time/full-time status within sex, covered by each of the items (i) to (v) in part III of his consultation document "Competition in the Provision of Local Authority Services"; and if he will reconcile these numbers with the published joint manpower watch.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is not available centrally. The joint manpower watch does not collect information for this detailed level of service, nor does it collect information about the sex of employees.

Holyhead

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance to create jobs has been directed through his Department since 1979 to the Holyhead travel-to-work area; how many jobs have been created; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Since 1 January 1979, offers of regional selective assistance made by my Department totalling £114,000 have been accepted by companies for new and expansion projects in the Holyhead travel-to-work area. These projects were expected to lead to the creation of 95 new jobs.

In addition, since that date my Department has approved urban programme assistance of £269,000 towards schemes which the local authority has estimated will employ between 170 and 180 people.

M4 (Design Life)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effects on the theoretical design life of more recently constructed sections of the M4 of the transference of heavy freight from rail to road being maintained after the coal strike for a period of (a) one year and (b) five years.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: I shall reply as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community the ratio between the estimated contribution of agriculture to gross domestic product and the contribution of a 1 per cent. value added tax each year from 1980.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is contained in the following table. The table gives figures for value added tax in agriculture, for the yield from a 1 per cent. tax on the harmonised value added tax base, and for the ratio between them. The data are given for 1980, 1981 and 1982. 1982 is the last year for which figures for value added in agriculture are available for the major countries of the European Economic Community; for Ireland and Luxembourg 1982 figures are not available, so the EC total is an estimate.

Value added in agriculture, and the yield from one per cent. of the harmonised value added tax base

	1980	1981	1982
(1) Value added in agriculture (millions of ecus)
United Kingdom	7,318	8,861	10,205
European Community	64,043	77,840	89,363
(2) One per cent yield from harmonised VAT base (millions of ecus)
United Kingdom	1,856	1,942	2,984
European Community	10,904	11,721	13,143
(3) Ratio (1)÷(2)
United Kingdom	3·94	4·56	3·42
European Community	5·87	6·64	6·80

Notes:

(i) Value added in agriculture is the contribution to GDP, and covers agriculture, hunting, forestry and fishing. Source: OECD National Accounts 1970-1982, except for France (UN Monthly Bulletin of Statistics); for Ireland and Luxembourg 1982 figures were not available, so agriculture was assumed to account for the same share of GDP as in 1981.

(ii) Value added, measured in national currencies, was converted to ecus using ecu exchange rates (average for the year). Source: European Economy.

(iii) The figures for one per cent. yield from the harmonised VAT base are Customs and Excise calculations based on European Commission figures and use Commission estimates for Greece. They were converted at budget exchange rates which vary significantly from year to year.

(iv) The Civil Service strike of 1981 delayed collection of some VAT until 1982. This is the major factor behind the exceptional 1982 figure for the United Kingdom's 1 per cent. VAT base. The budget figures for 1983 and 1984 are 1,926 and 2,927 million ecu respectively.

Taxation

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of earnings was absorbed by income tax and social security contributions for (a) a single person and (b) a married couple with two dependent children in 1979 and 1984 for the following income categories in 1984, with equivalent categories in 1979 expressed in constant prices: £1,500, £5,000, £12,000, £20,000 and £50,000.

Mr. Moore: Information is as follows:

Income tax plus NI contributions less child benefit as percentage of gross earnings

	1978-79			1984-85
*Gross earnings as percentage of average earnings	Gross earnings £ per year	Single	Married man with two children*	Gross earnings £ per year	Single	Married man with two children
		Percentage	Percentage		Percentage	Percentage
16	758	0·0	−35·2	1,500	0·0	−45·9

VAT

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate for the most recent year for which figures are available the value added tax collected by the offices in Truro, Penzance and Launceston.

Mr. Hayhoe: VAT is collected centrally, and receipts are not broken down by the locations of the businesses accounting for the tax. I regret that the information would not be available without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any current or pending EC regulations require the application of value added tax to non-domestic and civil engineering works.

Mr. Hayhoe: Under the EC sixth VAT directive, there is no specific relief for non-domestic construction or civil engineering work, but the United Kingdom Government take the view that zero rating is permissible as a transitional derogation under article 28.2. This view has been disputed by the Commission.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from the European Commission concerning the compatibility with the sixth value added tax directive of the exemption of certain goods and services from value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 14 March, at column 257, to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright).

Hot Take-away Food

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue derived from the imposition of 15 per cent. value added tax on hot take-away food.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been received as the result of value added tax being imposed on hot take-away food.

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated revenue from value added tax on hot take-away food during the first year of the liability to this tax.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my right hon. and hon. Friends to my answer on 12 November 1984, at column 89, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett).

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many jobs have been lost as a result of value added tax being imposed on hot take-away food.

Mr. Hayhoe: No reliable information is available on employment in the hot take-away food industry. However, there has been substantial real growth in the take-away food industry in recent years and this long-term trend can be expected to continue.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the imposition of value added tax has had on the take-away food industry.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 13 December 1984, at column 570, to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith).

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any undertaking was given when value added tax on hot take-away food was imposed that this tax decision would be reviewed at the end of 12 months.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. But all taxes are kept under regular review by the Government.

Families (Taxation)

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the taxation of families.

Mr. Moore: I have received several proposals on this subject from hon. Members and others.

Departmental Staff (Bonus Payments)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if bonus payments are to be given to Inland Revenue staff as a result of the intended collection of extra revenue following closer inspection of the accounts of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: As part of their policy to enhance the management performance and effectiveness of the Civil Service, the Government announced on 5 December 1984 an experimental scheme starting in April 1985 under which staff at the levels of grade 3 (Under Secretary) down to Principal and equivalent grades will have the opportunity to earn a bonus for particularly good performance during the year. This scheme will operate in all Departments. The staff eligible in the Inland Revenue include the more senior tax inspectors, but there is no question of the scheme being set up specifically for them. As it happens, the inspectors who will qualify for bonuses do not generally deal with the accounts of small businesses. But, in any event, no inspector has been offered the chance of a bonus for bringing in extra tax revenue from small businesses.

Merchant Shipping Industry

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the gross receipts to the United Kingdom invisible balance of payments arising from the operations of the United Kingdom merchant shipping industry in each year from 1979 to 1984; and what were the net balances on the sea transport invisible account as a whole in the same years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The latest estimates are as follows:

Balance of Payments Invisibles Account

£ million

	United Kingdom ship operators' gross credits	Balance on Sea Transport Account
1979	3,187	127
1980	3,144	141
1981	3,063	−160
1982	2,527	−530
1983	2,328	−884
1984*	2,570	−1,108

* Provisional.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that any report sent to him by Price Waterhouse or by the City police fraud squad into the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bankers will be published.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 260]: The Price Waterhouse report was commissioned by the Bank of England and is a matter for the governor. But I am advised that it contains confidential information concerning the commercial affairs of customers of Johnson Matthey Bankers, who are entitled to the normal confidence owed by a bank to its customers, and will not therefore be published. The findings of the report will, however, be taken fully into account by the official committee which is currently reviewing the system of banking supervision in the light of events at Johnson Matthey Bankers.

I have no reason to expect a report on the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bankers from the City police fraud squad.

EMPLOYMENT

Dock Labour

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what representations he has received on behalf of dock labour scheme port employers expressing concern at the effect on their competitive position of the burden of financing severance schemes administered by the National Dock Labour Board and drawing attention to the possible loss of jobs consequential upon any decision by scheme port employers to terminate their operations;

(2) when he expects to complete his urgent review of the basis of dock worker severance finance referred to in his minute presented to Parliament dated 30 January; on what basis severances of registered dock workers will be permanently financed after the current arrangements expire on 31 March; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that any revised scheme for the financing of severance payments for dock workers takes account of the impact of such a scheme on the relative competitive positions of scheme and non-scheme port employers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend is having continuing discussions with representatives of the port employers about severance arrangements in their industry. These discussions have embraced the issues to which my hon. Friend refers.

Job Release Schemes

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under both the part-time and full-time job release schemes.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following our annual review of allowances, the rates payable under the job release schemes from 8 April, will be as follows:

PART-TIME SCHEME

For disabled men aged 60 and 61 and men aged 62 and 63 who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £40·70 a week taxable; for all others £33·80 a week, taxable.

For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £35·55 a week, tax free; for all others £28·95 a week, tax free.

The new part-time scheme allowances include a supplement of £4, to make the scheme more attractive to employees.

FULL-TIME SCHEME

For disabled men aged 60, 61, 62 and 63—and for men who have joined the scheme at aged 62 and 63—who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £71·15 a week, taxable; for all others £58·35 a week, taxable.

For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £63 a week, tax free; for all others £49·95 a week, tax free.

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is proposing to make any further changes to the job splitting and part-time job release schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: As my right hon. Friend announced on 12 November, both schemes will continue in 1985-86 but with improvements designed to encourage changes in working patterns and to help in reducing unemployment.

The rules of the job splitting scheme will be changed with effect from 1 April to widen the scope of the scheme and to ensure that it operates more flexibly. The main changes are:

—to increase the grant available to employers from £750 to £840 payable in three instalments;

—to allow employers to create two new part-time jobs which must be filled by people leaving other Government schemes, notably the youth training scheme;

—to allow employers to create a part-time job from combining the regular overtime hours of existing full-time jobs;

—to remove the restrictions in the current rules on the time allowed for part-time workers to work or train alongside each other;

— and to permit more flexibility in the working arrangements to be adopted by allowing the hours of the part-time jobs to be averaged over a 13-week period.

In addition, for the first time, the grant will be payable to an employer supporting a successful application under the part-time job release scheme. Further changes have also been made to the part-time job release scheme to make it more attractive. They will apply in respect of employees who join the scheme on or after 29 April:

The main changes are:

—to remove the restriction preventing individuals from moving from the part-time scheme to the full-time schemes; and

—to simplify the application procedure and the current rules, particularly those covering the hours to be given up by the employee.

In addition, the new part-time scheme allowances applying from 8 April will include a supplement of £4, in addition to the usual annual increase, to make the scheme more attractive to employees.

New leaflets giving details of the changes will be available from Department of Employment regional offices, jobcentres and careers offices shortly.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the main improvements in economy and efficiency achieved in the Manpower Services Commission since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: While total expenditure on the Commission's programmes and services is increased from £640 million in 1978-79 to an estimated £2,260 million in 1985-86 as a result of the introduction of major new programmes, such as the community programme, the youth training scheme and the enterprise allowance scheme, MSC staff numbers have been reduced from 25,300 in April 1979 to 20,800.

Jobcentres

Major economies and improvements in efficiency in jobcentres have resulted from.

—the abandonment of compulsory registration for unemployed people (1,300 staff saved);

—a Rayner scrutiny of the employment service which resulted in a wide range of changes saving £8 million a year and almost 400 staff.

In addition recently agreed plans for the development of the employment service produce a larger jobcentre network with more advanced computerised vacancy handling arrangements leading to eventual savings of almost 1,000 staff and £8 million a year.

Professional and Executive Recruitment

Since April 1983 PER has been required to break even. It achieved this for the 1983-84 financial year and looks set to do so again this year. It now employes 290 permanent staff as compared with 770 in April 1979, but makes more placings overall.

Adult Training

It is planned to double—to 250,000—the number of adults trained under the commission's programmes within the current levels of resources available.

In order to ensure that the resources devoted to the direct provision of training by Government are spent cost effectively, the Government's main providers, the skillcentres, were reorganised in 1983 into the separate skillcentre training agency, and required ultimately to cover costs from trading income, in competition with other providers. The agency's proposals to enable it to do so from April 1986 will involve a significant streamlining of its operations.

Industrial Training Boards

Sixteen statutory industrial training boards out of a total of 23 have been replaced by more flexible voluntary arrangements, and the cost to the taxpayer of supporting these boards—over £60 million a year at today's prices —has been wholly eliminated.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculure, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1984 the prices and consumption of sheepmeat on the same basis as that given in his answer of 19 March 1984, Official Report, columns 356-58.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows. The estimated figures for 1983 given in my answer of 19 March 1984 have been replaced with the final figures.

Sheepmeat

United Kingdom	1983	1984

Animal Feedingstuffs

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much rapeseed in the EEC is used for animal feed; what is the cost to EEC funds of using this feed; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total subsidies paid by the EEC on ingredients to animal feed and the total value of the feed produced.

Mr. MacGregor: In 1984, Community production of rapeseed is estimated to have been 2·9 million tonnes, providing about 1·8 million tonnes of rapeseed meal, nearly all of which was incorporated in animal feed. Very little whole rapeseed is used in animal feed. Crushing subsidies of about 417 mecu were paid in 1984 to make Community-produced rapeseed competitive with imported seed but these payments were made in respect of the seed, of which the meal is only a by-product. Crushing subsidies of about 196 mecu and 33 mecu respectively were paid on sunflower seed and soya beans.

The following subsidies are estimated to have been paid by the Community in 1984 on other ingredients of animal feed (in mecu).

* Costs for this scheme are not yet separately available in the 1984 FEOGA budget estimates. The figure shown is the out-turn for 1983.
† A small part of this expenditure relates to aid for peas and beans for human consumption.
Source: FEOGA Budget estimates.

The total value of feed produced is not known but the value of purchased animal feed in 1983 is estimated at 30,683 million ecu.

Egg Production (Document)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the document, "Egg Production: briefing document," issued by the British Egg Industry Council, a copy of which has been sent to him; and whether he accepts the statistical information therein as to the condition of hens in cages.

Mr. Jopling: I have no responsibility for this document which was, I understand, issued by the British Egg Industry Council for the information of Members of Parliament, the media and others.

Thames Flood Barrier

Mr. Jessel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he considers existing arrangements for the operation of the Thames flood barrier provide adequate protection against flooding in Twickenham and Teddington.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985]: Yes. I have no evidence that existing arrangements for the operation of the barrier are not working as designed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

COCOM

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the new modified procedures agreed at the high-level COCOM meeting on 6 and 7 February for reviewing its list; into which four segments the list is divided for review purposes; and in which sequence the segments will be reviewed.

Mr. Channon: The division of COCOM lists has been arranged so that each segment contains similar list items grouped together and that there is a logical sequence of items between the segments, which will normally be reviewed between June of one year and the following June. In general terms, the first segment covers components and the associated manufacturing machinery and processes, chemicals, metalloids and petroleum products, and the atomic energy list; the second covers chemical and petroleum equipment, electronic communications equipment and related technology, and computers and software; the third covers metals minerals and their manufactures, metal working machinery, robotics and communications and fibre optic related list items, including telecommunications switching systems; and the fourth covers test equipment, transportation equipment, related electronic detection measurement and test equipment and their components, and the munitions list.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he proposes to consult the information technology industry prior to the annual reviews by COCOM of segments of its list.

Mr. Channon: My officials will follow the normal consultation process of approaching the relevant trade associations concerned, but, as always, we will be ready to consider the views of any interested parties. My Department issued a press notice on 4 March seeking firms' urgent views on those list items to be reviewed in the first segment. Copies of this notice were sent separately to trade associations and specialist trade journals, and it was also reprinted in my Department's weekly journal British Business on 8 March.

Overseas Trade Fairs

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to increase the number of small companies which participate in British Overseas Trade Board-supported overseas trade fairs.

Mr. Fletcher: As the BOTB stated in the consultation document dated 3 December 1984, which is available in the Library of the House, the board believes it right to concentrate on helping the smaller and medium sized firms to overcome the problems of entering new markets.

The BOTB believes it is best to achieve this emphasis by the nature of the schemes of support rather than by rules relating to the size of firms.

Registered Designs Act 1949 and Copyright Act 1956

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to amend the Registered Designs Act 1949 and section 10 of the Copyright Act 1956; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. and learned Member as soon as possible.

Regional Aid

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of his regional aid policy upon net employment in those industries to which the policy is directed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Until the recent changes in regional industrial policy, the policy was broadly directed at manufacturing industry in the assisted areas, although assistance was provided to some service sector projects. The available evidence suggests that by 1981 there were between 250,000 and 445,000 more manufacturing jobs in the assisted areas than there otherwise would have been if regional policy had not operated throughout the period since 1960. In addition to the effect on manufacturing industries directly aided, it is estimated that a further 100,000 to 185,000 jobs were indirectly created in the assisted areas in other industries.

It is too early to make an estimate of the employment effects of the changes in regional industrial policy introduced late last year.

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made to him regarding the effect of regional and other aid given to companies and persons where there is already over capacity in that particular industry; and what checks his Department makes on these matters before making grants to new firms.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Scrap Metal

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the increase in the price of scrap; if he has made any estimate of or has any information about the impact of this on the United Kingdom foundry industry; by how much the price has risen in each quarter since 1982; and what powers he has to introduce a system of export licences.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 14 March 1985, c. 206-7]: My Department has received representations from some 60 companies and organisations about the price of ferrous scrap, including a number from owners of foundries.

I am aware that ferrous scrap is an important raw material for the foundry industry and that changes in the price of scrap have a serious effect on its costs. The industry estimates that over the last 12 months this has added 10 per cent. to its production costs.

The following table shows the average price span for one grade of ferrous scrap for the first week of each quarter since 1982.

Date	£ per tonne
8 January 1982	39—41

Note: The prices given are for No. 1 heavy melting (OA) scrap.

Powers to introduce a system of licences for exports of ferrous scrap to countries other than EC member states exist under the Import, Export and Customs Power (Defence) Act 1939. It would be contrary to the treaty of Paris establishing the European Coal and Steel Community to impose controls on exports to other member states.

United States (High Technology Exports)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will obtain and place in the Library a copy of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report prepared for that organisation by Dr. Stuart Macdonald entitled, "The Sisyphus Syndrome—Implications of US Controls on High Technology Exports"; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 208-9]: I understand that the report in question was commissioned by the OECD secretariat directly from Dr. Macdonald to help it assemble background material for work on high technology issues. It has been written for the OECD secretariat and has not been distributed to any OECD member Government.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which multi-fibre arrangement product categories Pakistan, India and Sri Lanka utilised 90 per cent. or more of the multi-fibre arrangement quotas to the United Kingdom in the years 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 119]: In 1982 and 1983 India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka utilised 90 per cent. or more of their multi-fibre arrangement quotas to the United Kingdom for the following categories:

*India
1982: MFA categories 4, 6, 15B, 27 and 29
1983: MFA categories 4 and 27
Pakistan†
1982: MFA categories 1, 2, 4, 7, 8, ex 10, 27 and 80
1983: MFA categories 1, 2, ex 10 and 27
Sri Lanka
1982: MFA category 7
1983: MFA categories 7 and 8

* For India, category 6 was erroneously included for 1983 in reply to the hon. Member's question of 22 February 1985, at column 119.

† For Pakistan, category 27 was erroneously omitted for 1983 in the reply.

The final 1984 utilisation figures are not yet available.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the level of utilisation of the United Kingdom's multi-fibre arrangement quotas for each group I product category by each supplier country in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 117-20]: Utilisation of the 1983 quota for category 2, Egypt, was 80 per cent*.

* Erroneously shown as "n.a." in the reply.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Data

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why patient data held by family practitioner committees is not covered by the report from the confidentiality working group and the draft code "Confidentiality of Personal Health Data."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The report from the working group on confidentiality set up by the steering group on health services information—the Körner committee—was written as advice to health authorities on the policies and management arrangements appropriate for the information they hold about patients and employees. The draft code of practice on confidentiality of personal health data issued for consultation by our Department last October was also written with the needs of health authorities in mind. Preparations are being made for consultation on a separate code for family practitioner committees and other bodies involved in family practitioner service administration, which will be based on the same general principles.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will describe the nature and extent of personal data held by family practitioner committees in respect of patients;

(2) what arrangements exist for the protection and maintenance of confidentiality of patient data held by family practitioner committees; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the items of personal data held by a family practitioner committee in respect of a person registered under the National Health Service and on the list of a general practitioner.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Family practitioner committees may hold some or all of the following personal data relating to patients:

- Names and former and other names.
- Address and previous addresses.
- Sex.
- If female, marital status.
- Date and place of birth.
- National Health Service number.

Name of usual general medical practitioner, previous GMPs, and GMPs providing any emergency treatment.

Group identifiers (for example, students, new arrivals registering for general medical services).

- Patients receiving:
- Cervical cytology tests
- Maternity medical services (date of confinement).
- Contraceptive services.
- Sight tests (date of tests and collection of glasses).
- Oxygen supplies and equipment.
- Dental treatment, including details of treatment and husband's name if married; women living with husband where a refund is applied for; and details of emergency NHS dental treatment.
- Treatment to arrest dental haemorrhage and signature of parent or guardian, if applicable.
- Certain vaccinations and immunisations including reason for and date of vaccination, and school attended, if appropriate.

Under general medical service arrangements:

- Night visits
- Treatments as a temporary resident including expected stay in an area and details of treatment.
- Emergency treatment if residing in an area for 24 hours or less.

Exemptions from prescription, dental and optical charges giving health reasons or social security status.

Claim for refund for replacement of dental appliance on hardship grounds giving details of size of family, total weekly income, major weekly outgoings.

Medical records of deceased patients and those who have ceased to be registered with the GMP.

FPCs are expected to hold records in secure conditions and not to use personalised information for purposes other than that for which it was obtained without the written consent of the patient or his personal representatives save for bona fide research or in exceptional circumstances such as pursuant to a court order.

AIDS

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to make additional funds available to the National Health Service on (a) acquired immune deficiency syndrome research, (b) treatment and care of haemophiliacs and (c) other high risk groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government are already financing research on AIDS. Research in the United Kingdom is being co-ordinated by the Government funded Medical Research Council (MRC) working party on AIDS. It is for the MRC to decide its research priorities in this area.

As regards haemophiliacs, we are acting to protect them from the risk of contracting AIDS through their use of blood products and making considerable investment in new plant and equipment to manufacture safer products. I refer the hon. Member to my replies on 4 February and 5 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) at columns 450, 451, 525 and 527.

More generally we are distributing nearly £500 million in additional cash to regional health authorities in 1985-86, and are also expecting health authorities to produce cost improvement programmes yielding in excess of £100 million. The cost of dealing with AIDS will be a comparatively small demand on these additional resources for the Service as a whole.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he proposes to have with Health Ministers of the Governments of France and the Federal Republic of Germany about measures which they have taken in their respective countries to combat the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our officials are in regular contact with the World Health Organisation AIDS reference centre in Paris which collates AIDS data from European countries.

There is United Kingdom membership of the Comité de la Recherche Medicale (CRM) working group on AIDS which is responsible for European Community medical and public health research on the disease.

As well as maintaining contact with the CRM working group, members of the United Kingdom Medical Research Council working party on AIDS are collaborating with research workers overseas who have isolated the AIDS related virus.

The Italian Presidency is planning a meeting of the European Community Council of Health Ministers in the near future and this subject may be on the agenda.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the facilities for genito-urinary medicine to accommodate symptomatic acquired immune deficiency syndrome cases referred by general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for individual health authorities to decide the allocation of funds in this area in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assistance he intends to give to health authorities to enable them to raise the level of provision of counselling services in hospitals and communities for citizens who fear they are at risk of contracting the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are distributing nearly £500 million in additional cash to regional health authorities in 1985-86 and are also expecting health authorities to produce cost improvement programmes yielding in excess of £100 milion identified this year. This money may be used for the development of services generally including, where it is considered appropriate, services in connection with AIDS.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of persons addicted to (a) sedatives and (b) tranquillisers.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specialist services are available within the National Health Service for those addicted to prescribed tranquillisers or sedatives.

Mr. John Patten: There are no specialist services available within the National Health Service specifically for those addicted to prescribed tranquillisers or sedatives. They would normally either be treated by their general practitioner or referred for treatment under the hospital general medical and psychiatric services. A copy of a report containing guidelines for good clinical practice in the treatment of drug misuse, including guidance on the treatment of those addicted to tranquillisers or sedatives, was sent to every doctor in the country last year. All doctors should therefore now have the basic information necessary to enable them to help this group.

Prescriptions

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the current level of income below which a person may qualify for free prescriptions; what account is taken of dependants; whether income from any particular source or sources is disregarded; and whether he intends to increase the income limit when prescriptions are next raised.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The qualifying levels of income are based on the supplementary benefit scale rates to which is added a "tolerance margin" equal to £1·50 plus the cost of one prescription item. The levels vary with individual circumstances, including the number, age and income of dependants, any additional requirements and items of income which are disregarded in full or in part. They increase automatically when supplementary benefit is uprated or when the "tolerance margin" is raised.

When the prescription charge is increased from £1·60 to £2 on 1 April, the "tolerance margin" will automatically increase by the same amount. This will ensure that no-one currently entitled to low income exemption loses out due to the increase in the prescription charge.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of free prescriptions are dispensed for drugs which do not require a prescription to each category of persons entitled to free prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We estimate that approximately 30 per cent. of medicines and appliances prescribed and dispensed for those in the exempt groups are also available without prescription.

We do not collect prescription information in a way which would allow similar estimates to be made for each of the exempt groups.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of free prescriptions are dispensed to each category of persons entitled to free prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information available is as follows:

Percentage of all exempt items dispensed for that category

Exemption Category	percentage
Children under 16	19·3
Women 60 and over, men 65 and over	58·1
FPC Exempt	8·2
DHSS Exempt	14·0
War/Service Pensioners	0·4

Notes:
1. Figures relate to England only in 1983 and are based on sample data.
2. The category 'FPC exempt' covers those entitled to exemption on medical grounds, pregnant women and women who have had a baby within the preceding 12 months.

3. The category 'DHSS exempt' covers those entitled to exemption because they receive supplementary allowance, supplementary pension, family income supplement or housing benefit supplement and those awarded low income exemption.
4. The small proportion of exempt items where the exemption declaration does not specify an exemption category have been ignored.
5. No charge contraceptive items are not included.

Investigation (Runcorn and Widnes)

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how long his Department's fraud investigation team has been operating in the Runcorn and Widnes area; and for how long they intend to remain.

Mr. Newton: The visit of a specialist claims control team to the Department's Widnes local office started on 2 January and is planned to finish on 29 March.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants have been investigated to date; and how many cases of fraud are under investigation in the current investigations taking place in the Runcorn and Widnes area.

Mr. Newton: The specialist claims control team has completed 56 investigations to date; inquiries are continuing in a number of other cases and it is expected that by the end of the exercise about 130 cases will have been examined.

Sick Pay

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will institute a search of case papers of supplementary benefit claimants in receipt of statuory sick pay back to April 1983, following the decision of the social security commissioners case CSB402/84;

(2) (a) what are the numbers of supplementary benefit claimants likely to be affected by the decision in the social security commissioner's case CSB402/84, (b) what are the estimated annual costs of applying the commissioner's decision and (c) when he anticipates that paragraphs 6564, 6583 and 6653 of the 'S' manual will be altered to take account of the decision.

Mr. Newton: I will let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the European Commission concerning the status of his limited list proposals with regard to European Community law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Commission has invited us to submit observations on our proposals and we will be replying in due course. We are quite satisfied that our proposals comply with Community law.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to make available on National Health Service prescription the 13 drugs which were previously available on prescription only but which under the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regulations 1985 would no longer be available for supply under pharmaceutical services either in generic or brand-name form; if he will explain the reasons for his original decision in respect of these 13 drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have been advised by our panel of independent experts that adequate alternatives exist to all the drugs which will cease to be available on NHS prescription from 1 April, whatever their licensed status. By making a selection of drugs to remain available on NHS prescription, substantial savings will be made, to be used for other services to patients in the NHS.

Patients will, if they wish, be able to obtain prescription-only medicines not available under the NHS on non-NHS prescription. But there will be no medical need for them to do so.

Board and Lodging (Barking and Dagenham)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received board and lodgings allowances in the borough of Barking and Dagenham in the last month for which figures are available; and what was the total cost.

Mr. Newton: Separate figures are not available for Barking and Dagenham and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many male and how many female registered blind people are in receipt of severe disablement allowance;

(2) how many registered blind people, now receiving severe disablement allowance, were receiving non-contributory invalidity pension or housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension before the severe disablement allowance was introduced;

(3) how many registered partially sighted people, male and female, are in receipt of severe disablement allowance;

(4) how many registered partially sighted people, now receiving severe disablement allowance, were receiving non-contributory invalidity pension or housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension before the severe disablement allowance was introduced.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

However, the latest available figures show that, as at April 1983, some 800 men and 400 women with disorders of the eye were incapable of work and receiving non-contributory invalidity pension. It is not known how many of these were registered blind or partially sighted. All those drawing non-contributory invalidity pension immediately prior to the introduction of severe disablement allowance on 29 November 1984 were automatically transferred to the new benefit from that date. One man and 35 women who have been newly awarded severe disablement allowance since last November are shown as suffering from disorders of the eye. Of these all but one of the women have been accepted as satisfying the disablement condition on the grounds that they are registered blind or partially sighted.

Clobazam

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will explain the reasons for his decision to place restrictions on the circumstances in which Clobazam may be prescribed; if he will reconsider his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We were advised by the Chief Medical Officer's panel of independent medical and pharmaceutical experts that Clobazam was essential for the treatment of certain types of epilepsy but not in its use solely as a tranquilliser. Other tranquillisers have similar effects for all cases other than epilepsy and are much cheaper. To make Clobazam generally available as a tranquilliser would therefore entail a substantial amount of unnecessary expenditure.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make it his policy to refrain from issuing any administrative guidance which calls in question the right of a community health council to represent the interests of its non-resident public;

(2) if he will make it his policy to refrain from issuing any administrative guidance which calls in question the right of a community health council to raise issues with a regional health authority as a managing authority and as a planning authority;

(3) if he will make it his policy to refrain from issuing any administrative guidance which calls in question the right of a community health council to consider issues which are not the responsibility of its corresponding district health authority;

(4) if he will make it his policy to refrain from issuing any administrative guidance which calls in question the right of a community health council to concern itself with issues which extend beyond the geographical boundaries of its district.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to issue such guidance.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the replies of district health authorities to his circular of June 1984 asking about drug abuse and their plans to counter it.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Antacids

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the comparative cost per dose of (a) Polycrol and (b) the branded antacids which remain available on National Health Service prescription; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is as follows:

Basic NHS Cost per Dose

Product	Pence
(a)
Polycrol Gel	3—6
Polycrol Tablets	1·7—3·4
Polycrol Forte Gel	3—6
Polycrol Forte Tablets	2·4—4·8
(b)
Gastrocote Tablets	4·1—12·4
Gaviscon Infant	16
Gaviscon Liquid	5·8—11·5
Gaviscon Tablets	4·8—9·5
Gelusil Suspension	2·5—10·1
Maalox Suspension	5·5—11
Mucogel Suspension	5·5—11
Mucaine	0·8—1·5

I am advised that the antacid effect varies between products and is not necessarily related to the dose on which these prices are based.

I also refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 14 March at columns 242-43.

Domestic Services

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria he has laid down for health authorities which decide to privatise domestic services to ensure that arrangements are made to secure competitive bids from the maximum number of applicants, including in-house tenders.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have advised health authorities to ensure that tenders are sought from a sufficient number of firms and the in-house service, to provide fair and adequate competition.

Public Laboratories

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what medical bodies he intends to consult while considering his proposal to transfer the public health laboratory service's 52 regional and area laboratories to the administration of health authorities;

(2) what resources he will make available to health authorities to enable them to continue recruitment of well-trained consultants to the laboratories of the public health laboratory service and to maintain a clinical microbiological service, a public health microbiological service and co-ordination for national epidemiological work in the 52 laboratories if they are to administer them in the future;

(3) in which spheres of research the public health laboratory service and the Department of Health and Social Security are currently working jointly.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Cataract

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he intends to issue to patients about the advantages and disadvantages of replacing a cataractous lens by an equivalent implant of plastic over traditional pebble spectacles.

Mr. John Patten: Clinical advice is entirely a matter for a patient's medical practitioner who would, no doubt, take account of relevant published researh and the advice of professional bodies.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the waiting list figures for 30 September 1984 will, when they are published, reflect the review which health authorities have been asked to carry out to improve their accuracy, referred to in the answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 62.

Mr. John Patten: No. The letter asking authorities to carry out the review went out in December 1984.

Ancillary Services (Contractors)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those district health authorities with which he or his Department has had discussions or correspondence with regard to the awarding of in-house contracts for laundry, cleaning and catering services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 275]: We have identified the following health authorities with which our Department has had discussions or correspondence where the work has been, or might have been, awarded in-house.

Bristol and Weston

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Latent Damage (Report)

38. Mr. Chapman asked the Attorney-General what representations he has received from the various parts of the construction industry following the Law Reform Committee's report on latent damage, Cmnd. 9390.

The Solicitor-General: The closing date for comments on the Law Reform Committee's report is the end of March. But the Lord Chancellor's Department has already received comments from a number of sources, including the construction industry.

"MI5's Official Secrets"

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Attorney-General if the Independent Broadcasting Authority sought his advice about its competence to ban the Channel 4 programme, "MI5's Official Secrets", on grounds that this might infringe the Official Secrets Act; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Attorney-General if, subsequent to the initial decision of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to ban the showing of the programme, "MI5's Official Secrets", on Channel 4, and before his announcement that there were to be no prosecutions against the makers of this programme, he had discussions with the chairman and members of the authority about possible infringements of the Official Secrets Act.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Attorney-General if he had discussions with the Independent Broadcasting Authority about possible infringements of the Official Secrets Act by the programme entitled "MI5's Official Secrets" before the authority's initial decision to ban the showing of this programme on Channel 4.

The Attorney-General: No.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sub-Sahara Africa

39. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest famine reports from the sub-Sahara.

Mr. Raison: The situation in Africa continues to be serious, although substantial progress in the provision of food has been made. For the financial year 1985-86 we have pledged in advance a minimum bilateral allocation of £30 million for drought victims, refugees or others suffering from disaster in Africa.

46. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if United Kingdom aid in parallel to the World Bank special fund for sub-Saharan Africa will be untied.

Mr. Raison: Yes.

Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on why Her Majesty's Government will not contribute directly to the World Bank's special facility for sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Raison: We could only make a direct contribution to the special facility at the expense of our future bilateral aid programmes, including programmes to African countries. The Government preferred to make some of our bilateral aid available in close support of the special facility and subject to the same World Bank conditionality. This arrangement has been accepted by the World Bank as constituting "special joint financing" in support of the facility. The offers of the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Switzerland have been similarly designated.

Departmental Contingency Reserve

44. Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what items he had planned to spend his Department's contingency reserve for 1984-85 prior to his decision to allocate the reserve to alleviate the famine in Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Mr. Raison: The reserve existed to deal with contingencies as they arose within the financial year.

Africa (UN Conference)

45. Mr. Mark Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the United Nations Secretary-General's conference on Africa in Geneva on 11 to 12 March.

Mr. Raison: Although it was not intended as a pledging conference, considerable progress was made towards the mobilisation of resources. Precise figures will not be available until all delegations' speeches have been analysed in detail. There was a feeling overall that the conference was of real value.

Namibia

47. Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances he would be prepared to authorise the granting of loans and grants for development projects in Namibia.

Mr. Raison: Her Majesty's Government would certainly consider offering development assistance to Namibia after independence achieved in accordance with Security Council Resolution 435.

World Bank Fund for Africa

48. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the United Kingdom offer of $75 million to the World Bank fund for Africa was rejected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The United Kingdom offer was not rejected. The World Bank's press release, at the conclusion of the donors meeting in Paris on 1 February, made it clear that our contribution would be included in the category of "special joint financing", subject to procurement conditions to be notified. The Government have now decided that the United Kingdom contribution should be untied for procurement purposes.

British Goods (Procurement)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate how much procurement of British goods has been forgone by failure to subscribe to the World Bank fund for Africa.

Mr. Raison: The World Bank's special facility for sub-Saharan Africa is not expected to become operational until 1 July. When it does, British firms should be able to bid for contracts financed from the facility, and under the special jount financing provided by the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. This follows from the Government's decision to untie the United Kingdom contribution to the special joint financing, which is now being communicated to the World Bank.

Ethiopia

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the most recent estimates of the amount of grain that will arrive in the port of Assab in Ethiopia for each of the next three months, and as to how much will be in store at the port for each of those months.

Mr. Raison: Expected landings and stocks of relief food commodities at the port of Assab in the next three months are:

Month	Estimated landings (metric tonnes)	Estimated month end stocks (metric tonnes)
April	90,000	86,000
May	65,000	91,000
June	30,000	60,000

Grain-based commodities will account for approximately 80 per cent. of the above figures. Further shipments are likely to be arranged in the months ahead. Month end stocks will fluctuate according to the availability of vehicles. Target off-take is 3,000 tonnes a day against present average off-take of about 2,000 tonnes a day.

Food Aid (Ethiopia and Sudan)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the amount of food aid actually delivered to Sudan and Ethiopia, respectively, by the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Economic Community, respectively, over the past 12 months.

Mr. Raison: The available figures, which cover the period since the begining of 1984, are as fiollows:

	Sudan	Ethiopia (tonnes)
European Community
Cereals	16,600	133,000
Milk Powder	3,100	5,100
Butter oil	1,400	2,300
Beans	—	2,400
Sugar	—	100
United Kingdom
Cereals	*28,500	26,500

No figures are available for deliveries by other member states of the Community.

* Wheat equivalent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Salaries and Allowances

Mr. Thurnham asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will list the costs for 1983-84, and the estimated costs for 1984-85 and 1985-86, of Members of Parliament's salaries and allowances.

Mr. Biffen: The actual costs for 1983-84 and the estimated costs for 1984-85 and 1985-86 of salaries and allowances of Members of Parliament are as follows:

1983-84	25,292,727·36
1984-85	27,906,000·00
1985-86	29,012,000·00

Notes:

1. The above costs include Parliamentary salaries, employers national insurance contributions, resettlement grants, Members' rail, air and car travel expenses, secretarial and additional costs allowances.
2. Secretarial travel and redundancy expenses, drafting assistance for private Members' Bills, VDU expenses, financial assistance to Opposition parties and Exchequer payments to the Parliamentary contributory pension fund and the Members' fund are not included.
3. All the above payments are made from the Parliament and Privy Council: House of Commons Vote, class VIII, Vote. 2.

Staff, Police and Security Personnel

Mr. Thurnham asked the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list the costs for 1983-84 and the estimated costs for 1984-85 and 1985-86, of the salaries and allowances paid to staff of the House and to the police and security services.

Mr. Beith: The costs of salaries and allowances of House staff and of payments to the Metropolitan police for maintenance of security services in the House are as follows:

	1983-84 (actual) £	1984-85 (estimated) £	1985-86 (estimated) £
(1) Staff salaries and allowances	9,220,727	10,092,000	10,769,000
(2) Police and security services	2,467,455	2,750,000	2,902,000

Sittings

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 15, he will state, week by week for the current Session, the average time of rising of the House from Monday to Thursday.

Mr. Biffen: The average times of rising of the House from Monday to Thursday for each week during the present session were as follows:

Date	Time
6-8 November	10.27 pm
12-15 November	11.12 pm
19-22 November	11.43 pm
26-29 November	1.19 am
3-6 December	1.34 am
10-13 December	12.37 am
17-20 December	2.35 am
1985
9-10 January	10.59 pm
14-17 January	1.54 am
21-24 January	11.37 pm
28-31 January	11.24 pm
4-7 February	1.42 am
11-14 February	1.15 am
18-21 February	1.29 am
25-28 February	12.09 am
4-7 March	6.27 am
11-14 March	11.48 pm

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Ashton asked the Lord Privy Seal whether, when the new television licence fee arrangements are announced, he will arrange for this to be made as an oral statement to the House instead of the usual written question.

Mr. Biffen: It is not the normal practice to indicate in advance the form which announcements will take. This announcement will be made in the manner thought most appropriate having regard to its importance and other relevant factors.

ENVIRONMENT

Grant-Related Expenditure

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make available his Department's publication, "Grant-Related Expenditure 1985-86."

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has today placed copies of this document in the Library of the House. Copies have also been sent to every local authority in England and to the local authority associations.

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what adjustments he estimates will be made, in the year commencing 1 April 1986 to the grant-related expenditure assessments and expenditure targets of the councils of London boroughs and metropolitan districts so as to reflect the increased responsibilities of those councils for buildings at present owned by the Greater London council or the metropolitan county councils and transferred to the boroughs and districts, as proposed in the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: The grant related expenditure assessments which the GLC and metropolitan county councils would have received for all services transferred to the lower tier will be redistributed to the borough and district councils. If expenditure targets are retained, targets for the successor authorities will also be adjusted to reflect the extra spending transferred to them. The detailed arrangements are now being discussed with the representatives of the authorities concerned.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to announce the further sites for consideration for the reception of low and intermediate level nuclear wastes.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. However, I expect NIREX to be in a position in a few months' time to announce alternative possible sites for shorter-lived wastes.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether population density is a criterion in site selection for a nuclear repository; and whether it is regarded as a radiological or a planning consideration.

Mr. Waldegrave: The radiological requirements are set out in the publication, "Disposal facilities on land for low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes: principles for the protection of the human environment" (HMSO 1984) and the developer will be expected to show that the facility will comply with them, both for existing and for future populations. Current population density will be one relevant planning consideration, and will be covered in the environmental assessment NIREX will be required to prepare for each site.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reason he abandoned the initial public inquiry announced in his statement in the Official Report, 25 October, column 154, and replaced it by a special development order in a further statement on 24 January, Official Report, column 1146.

Mr. Waldegrave: The situation has been changed by my right hon. Friend's further request to NIREX to investigate at least three possible sites for each type of disposal facility. It would be unnecessarily time-consuming and repetitious to have a number of separate local inquiries of limited scope into geological investigations. The revised procedure, incorporating a special development order, will avoid such unnecessary delay and uncertainty, and will also provide an opportunity for a debate in Parliament.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the study on disposal and storage options by his Department, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee to determine the best practical environmental option is due to report; and whether the report will be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: A report will be published after the necessary studies have been completed later this year.

Shooting List

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to return the redshank, the curlew and the stock dove to the shooting list.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no immediate plans to add the redshank and curlew to schedule 2 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, but I have asked the Nature Conservancy Council to review the position.

The European Commission has been asked to add the United Kingdom to the list of countries in which the stock dove may be hunted. If agreement to this is secured, that species will be added to Schedule 2, Part II, to the Act, that is species which can be shot by authorised persons at any time.

Repair Schemes

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of discussions between his Department, the National Housebuilders' Council and the Building Societies' Association concerning the acceptability of various repair schemes for pre-cast reinforced concrete houses and flats for mortgage purposes; when this information will be conveyed to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 20 February at column 485. My Department and the Welsh Office had a meeting with the local authority associations on 5 March and a further meeting is being arranged for 27 March, involving also representatives of the National House Building Council and the Building Societies Association. I will make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the sites of special scientific interest guidance criteria require the Nature Conservancy Council to notify as a site of special scientific interest rough grazing and heather moorland which regularly supports 1 per cent. or more of the British breeding population of a species of bird listed upon both schedule 1 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and Annex one of EC directive 79/4092.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Nature Conservancy Council would normally consider it appropriate to notify as sites of special scientific interest well defined localities which have contained 1 per cent. or more of the total British breeding population of any native British species for 5 years or more. Sites with rare species or very small populations do not normally qualify for such designation unless the habitat in which they are found is also scarce within the region concerned.

The Nature Conservancy Council's explanatory pamphlet "The Selection of Sites of Special Scientific Interest" gives further details of the selection criteria, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Dr Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many requests for section 29 orders under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 have been made by the Nature Conservancy Council; how many have been refused and why; and whether damage or loss of sites of special scientific interest has occurred as a result.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Nature Conservancy Council has to date requested 17 orders throughout Great Britain. 14 have been made (10 in England, two in Scotland and two in Wales). In the remaining three cases I was not fully satisfied that the site met the criteria set out in section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. There has been no further damage to these sites following the decision that an order should not be made. In the case of one of the three sites, agreement has now been reached with the owner. The other two sites are now fully protected under section 28 of the 1981 Act.

Wild Birds (Conservation)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites have been identified with the United Kingdom as fulfilling the criteria for listing under (a) the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance and (b) EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds; and if he will state the time table for listing these areas.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Nature Conservancy Council has identified 129 sites which meet the criteria for listing under the Ramsar convention, and 151 which satisfy the requirements for listing under EC directive 79/409. Further such sites may be identified in the future.

The listing of these sites is being carried out as part of the notification and re-notification of sites of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which is expected to be substantially complete by the end of 1987.

Edlingham Castle

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects restoration work at Edlingham castle to be completed; and at what total cost to public funds.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Historical Buildings and Monuments Commission is now responsible for the management and maintenance of Edlingham castle. I understand that the consolidation works now being carried out are proceeding satisfactorily, and that the commission expects the final cost to be less than that originally estimated. If the hon. Member would like further details, he may wish to approach the chairman of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission.

First-time Home Purchasers

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on assistance available to first-time home purchasers in areas where property prices are above the national average.

Sir George Young: First-time home purchasers can qualify for benefits under the homeloan scheme, if they buy homes costing less than the price limit for their region. These price limits are based on the prices actually being paid in each region by first time buyers, and thus are highest in areas where property prices are above the national average. They are set at a level which is intended to allow two-thirds of first time buyers in each region to satisfy this condition of the Scheme.

Domestic Water Supplies

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of homes in each water authority area which do not enjoy a satisfactory supply of pipes and potable water.

Mr. Macfarlane: Water authorities submit annual plans to my Department which this year will contain information about the quantity of water supplied in the year which failed to meet certain standards laid down in the EC directive on quality of water intended for human consumption. My Department is also regularly informed about water undertakers' progress in reducing lead concentrations in water. This information is expressed in supply zones and population served.

Housing (Leeds)

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the precentage increase in house improvements in Leeds for 1984 or the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The total of conversions and improvements of local authority dwellings and of grant aided renovations of housing association and private dwellings in the first nine months was 16 per cent. higher in 1984 than in 1983.

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage increase in housing starts in Leeds, in both the private and public sectors, for 1984 compared with 1983 and compared with the United Kingdom as a whole.

Sir George Young: The following percentage changes calculated from the number of starts reported in Leeds and published in "Local Housing Statistics" and estimated starts in the United Kingdom published in table 1.2 of "Housing and Construction Statistics" No. 19.

House-building starts January to September 1983 and of 1984: percentage changes

	Public	Private	All
Leeds	−58	+30	−1
United Kingdom (provisional)	−16	−7	−9

System-built Housing

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to examples of the transformation of large panel concrete system-built estates built in the 1960s; and if he will name the local authorities involved.

Mr. Gow: At least 80 local authorities are introducing locally-based management to improve the quality of life on different estates including those built with large panel systems. 20 examples of such initiatives are described in the Department's Priority Estates Project Survey "Local Housing Management", a copy of which is in the Library. Seven of the estates concerned are modern concrete complex developments.

Housing Estates (Manchester)

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the marketing exercise and the private developers' findings relating to the Wellington street (Bison) and the Turkey lane (Unit Camus) housing estates in Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: The city council has sought a special determination for housing subsidy to continue to be payable after demolition of the dwellings at Wellington street. In considering whether to make a determination, I expect to take account of any alternatives to demolition, including disposal to the private sector. The city council has been asked to provide further information in support of its application. I would expect to receive similar information should the council seek a special determination in respect of the Turkey lane estate.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his assessment of the structural state of Wellington street housing estate, built by Bison (Northern) Concrete Ltd., was such that effective improvements to the estate were impossible.

Mr. Gow: It is for a local authority to make a structural survey of dwellings which it proposes to demolish and to offer it in support of any application for continued subsidy following demolition.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took, when consenting to Manchester city council's proposal to demolish Wellington street estate, of its expenditure of £700,000 in an attempted design improvement scheme.

Mr. Gow: My consent was not required for the demolition of the dwellings at Wellington street.

Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds will be made available to the Historic Buildings and Momuments Commission on the projected transfer to it of buildings at present vested in the Greater London council and metropolitan counties; and if these sums will equal at minimum in real terms the amounts currently being spent on such buildings.

Mr. Macfarlane: In considering the additional resources that the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission will need for the historic buildings that it is proposed should transfer to it from the ownership of the GLC under clause 43 of the Local Government Bill, proper account will be taken of the sums being sent in respect of these properties prior to that council's abolition.

Departmental Offices (Marsham Street)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what he attributes the process of carbonation in his Department's main office building and the spalling of concrete with rust staining; whether calcium chloride was used as an additive to the concrete and if tests have been carried out on the level of chlorides in the concrete; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department's main office building in Marsham street, London, was designed; over what period it was constructed; when it was completed; what was the cost of the construction; who were the architects; and who were the builders.

Sir George Young: No. 2 Marsham street was designed by the Ministry of Public Building and Works in conjunction with the architects, Robert Atkinson and Partners. Design work commenced in 1959. A contract for foundation and basement work was undertaken between July 1963 and November 1964. The main contract, undertaken by Bernard Sunley and Sons Limited, started in November 1964 and was completed in March 1971.

Final fitting out was handled as a separate contract and occupation of the building was phased throughout the summer of 1971. The total cost of construction, excluding professional fees, site purchase and clearance was £7·975 million.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimate of the future life of his Department's headquarters building; and what remedial works are planned, or are necessary to the main structural elements.

Sir George Young: Campbell Reith Hill, the PSA consultant investigating the concrete defects in the superstructure of 2 Marsham street indicate that, provided the sample cover readings are representative of the whole building, then the sixty year design life should be achieved.

First-aid remedial action to spalled areas has been undertaken.

When repairs start, access to the end walls of the buildings will be provided so that a corrosion survey, a full cover depth check and carbonation survey can be completed. Areas where these tests show that spalling of the concrete is likely will have the concrete removed, the reinforcement cleaned and the concrete repaired. Consideration will be given to applying a membrane to the entire surface of these walls to prevent further carbonation, ingress of moisture and air, so as to prevent corrosion of the reinforcement.

Cracks to the precast concrete mullions are being monitored for movement.

Calcium Chloride

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the use of calcium chloride as an additive to concrete was discontinued and prohibited by the Property Services Agency in connection with contracts let or supervised by it.

Sir George Young: Calcium chloride and concrete additives containing calcium chloride were banned on PSA works in September 1974.

Molesworth

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any proposals to extinguish the public right of way along Old Weston road, near Molesworth.

Mr. Macfarlane: I will answer this question shortly.

Local Government Inquiry

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of his announcement on 6 February, Official Report, column 957 of an inquiry into the practices and procedures in local government, he will prepare and place in the Library a paper outlining the current rights, responsibilities and duties of elected members as referred to in paragraph (a) of the terms of reference of the inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The evidence to be submitted in due course to the Widdecombe committee by the Department is likely to cover the points raised by the hon. Member. It is because the rights, responsibilities and duties of councillors are unclear that this issue has been referred to the committee. Copies of the Department's evidence will be placed in the Library.

Departmental Managers (Accounting)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what accounting developments are being made in his Department to give linemanagers better information about the cost and condition of the capital assets they are managing.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Under the Property Repayment Services (PRS) system introduced in April 1983, the Property Services Agency raises charges on occupants of the civil estate which cover market rents, maintenance and other running costs. The system is being progressively refined in order to reflect as closely as possible the opportunity costs of departments' occupation of the civil estate. To support PRS, the agency has recently implemented a new computerprised system of estate records, which gives its estates staff access to a centralised property data base.

To assist control of expenditure on maintenance of properties, a micro computer system has now been installed in all the agency's district works offices, and trials of enhanced property-based budgetary control arrangements are under way. A new system of regular building inspections has also been instituted as a basis for recording future maintenance requirements and their relative priority.

Further improvements in management information will form part of the longer-term strategy adopted by PSA for the implementation of information technology throughout the agency.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mechanical Engineering Products

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the average value per tonne of total United Kingdom exports of mechanical engineering products compared with the average value per tonne of total imports of mechanical engineering products into France, West Germany, Italy and Sweden in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what was the average value per tonne of total United Kingdom imports of mechanical engineering products compared with the average value per tonne of imports of mechanical engineering products into France, West Germany, Italy and Sweden in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Channon: The information is in the table.

Iron and Steel (Prices)

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the level of increases in prices of (a) steel scrap, (b) cylinder iron and (c) pig iron for each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Butcher: I have the following information on the price of scrap metal which is derived from the publication "Metal Bulletin".

Scrap Metal and Castings

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what representations he has received concerning the scrap metal industry during the last 12 months.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has received letters from some 60 undertakings complaining about the price of ferrous scrap and calling for the imposition of export controls. The Minister of State for Industry has recently held discussions with both the British Independent Steel Producers Association and the British Scrap Federation.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to introduce export controls on scrap metal as a raw material.

Mr. Butcher: No. National controls would be ineffective. United Kingdom scrap would merely be shipped to other member states and then exported to third countries.

Software Products Scheme

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been received under the software products scheme; how many have been refused and how many are being processed; what is the value of total grants so far approved; how much is under negotiation; how much remains uncommitted; how the ratio of rejected applications compares with that under other section 8 schemes under the Industry Act 1972; and how the administrative cost per application processed under the software scheme compares with the administrative cost of processing each application under other section 8 schemes.

Mr. Butcher: The information is as follows.
571 proposals have been received under the software products scheme; 180 have been rejected; 20 are currently being processed. The value of total grants for the 371 cases approved so far is around £41 million. Grants potentially totalling £3 million are currently under negotiation. Of the £12 million announced for the SPS last year over one half has so far been committed. The ratio of rejected to approved applications is 1:2. This compares with 1:3 for the sectoral schemes operated under section 8 of the Industry Act 1972. Figures for individual case processing costs in respect of the software products scheme and other sectoral schemes under the Industry Act 1972 are not available.

Japan (Imports)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in the light of the European Commission's recent decision to impose a tariff against excavators from Japan, he has any plans to instigate action against any other imports from that country.

Mr. Channon: The European Commission is at present investigating three possible instances of Japanese dumping of imports which might lead to the instigation of similar provisional anti-dumping duties. It is open to any industry which believes that it is being similarly injured by unfairly priced imports from whatever source to request the Commission to investigate them and the Commission has the competence to introduce the appropriate remedies.

Overseas Trade Fairs

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many overseas trade fairs were supported by the British Overseas Trade Board in 1984; and how many he expects the British Overseas Trade Board to support in 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Fletcher: In 1984 the BOTB provided assistance to groups of British exporters at 332 overseas trade fairs. As stated in the consultation document issued by the BOTB on 3 December 1984, which is available in the Library of the House, it is expected that the programme of events supported in 1985-86 may be reduced by perhaps 5 per cent. to 10 per cent.

The consultation document also included proposals about the use of BOTB funds for 1986-87. The board will be considering the resources available for support at overseas trade fairs during that year in the light of the responses to the consultation document.

British Telecom Shares

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he made it a condition of the placing of British Telecom shares with Kleinwort Benson prior to privatisation that no employees of the firm should deal in the shares on their own account;

(2) if, before settling his final account with Kleinwort Benson in respect of the privatisation of British Telecom, he will seek from the firm information on the number of its employees who used the firm's facilities to deal on their own account in the shares.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Information Technology Industry

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 278, he will provide a breakdown, by each sector of the information technology industry, namely, office machinery, electronic data processing equipment, telecommunications equipment, radio and electronic capital goods, electronic components and sub-assemblies and electronic consumer goods, of the balance of trade for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers employed in each sector of the information technology industry, namely, office machinery, electronic data processing equipment, telecommunications equipment, radio and electronic capital goods, electronic components and sub-assemblies and electronic consumer goods, for each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the average growth rates of the information technology industry in Germany, France, Japan, the United States of America and the United Kingdom between 1979 and 1984;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the world market share and (b) the European market share of the whole information technology industry in office machinery, electronic data processing equipment, telecommunications equipment, radio and electronic capital goods, electronic components and sub-assemblies and electronic consumer goods, for each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 11 March 1985, c. 23]: The available information on market shares is in the table. The United Kingdom average annual growth rate in this industry between 1979 and 1984 was 15 per cent. at current prices (8 per cent. at constant prices); comparable information for other countries is not readily available.

Manufacturing

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what change has taken place in the level of manufacturing in each of the years 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is as follows:

Information Technology (Skill Shortages)

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is proposing to solve the problems of skill shortages in the information technology industries.

Mr. Butcher: Pursuant to my answer to a supplementary question asked by the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 27 February 1985 at column 333, the following are the trade balances for the years 1979-1983 and, the full-year figures not yet being available, for January-September 1984 for the information technology industries including, and excluding electronic consumer goods.

Regional Aid

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made to him regarding the effect of regional and other aid given to companies and persons where there is already over capacity in that particular industry; and what checks his Department makes on these matters before making grants to new firms.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 15 March 1985, c. 32]: Representations on this subject are made from time to time. Capacity in the sector of industry concerned and the possible displacement effect of Government assistance are factors that are always taken into account before selective financial assistance, on a regional or national basis, is offered. But cases are looked at on their merits and the prime consideration, apart from additionality, is the viability of the individual proposal.

Registered Designs Act 1949 and Copyright Act 1956

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to amend the Registered Designs Act 1949 and section 10 of the Copyright Act 1956; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 15 march 1985, c. 32]: The Registered Designs Act 1949 and the Copyright Act 1956 are under review in the light of consultations on the Green Papers "Reform of the Law relating to Copyright, Designs and Performers' Protection" (Cmnd. 8302) and "Intellectual Property Rights and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9117). This review, which is also taking account of the recommendations contained in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the Ford Motor Company Limited, will be completed as soon as possible.

THE CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Redundant Churches Fund

Mr. Frank Field asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will detail in the Official Report the number of churches vested in the Redundant Churches Fund since its inception; and if these data can be classified according to (a) the diocese of the church, (b) whether the church is sited in a rural, urban or city area, and (c) by age according to whether the building is pre-1500, 1500 to 1700, 1700 to 1800, 1800 to 1900 and post-1900.

Sir William van Straubenzee: One hundred and ninety churches have been vested in the redundant churches fund since its inception in 1969. They are, with the classifications requested, as follows:

Dioceses	Rural	*Urban city	Pre-1500	1500 to 1700	1700 to 1800	1800 to 1900	Post-1900

HOME DEPARTMENT

Molesworth

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire on his plans to issue identification cards to the residents of Molesworth; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire that vehicle identification discs are being issued to local residents so that the police can distinguish their vehicles. This will help to lessen the disruption and inconvenience to the local community arising from demonstrations at Molesworth, and is similar to arrangements made in the vicinity of certain football grounds on match days.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cambridgeshire constabulary on the cost of the recent operation at RAF Molesworth; and if he has received any request from the Cambridgeshire or any other constabulary for financial assistance in connection with security at Molesworth.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the Cambridgeshire police authority estimates the additional costs of policing RAF Molesworth in the period 5 to 10 February to be some £360,000. Following an approach from Cambridgeshire county council my right hon. and learned Friend has told the police authority that special financial help will be made available, on the same terms as the special payment which we are making for the additional costs of policing the miners' dispute, to meet the additional costs of policing mass demonstrations at RAF Molesworth and Alconbury in the financial year 1985-86.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were detained under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 during 1984 in: (a) the Metropolitan police district, and (b) each of the police areas in England and Wales, or if those figures are unavailable centrally, in the rest of England and Wales combined.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The only information collected centrally relates to persons admitted to hospital under section 136. I understand from the Secretary of State for Social Services that the latest information for England is given in "In-patient Statistics from the Mental Health Enquiry—England 1982" published in March 1985; and from the Secretary of State for Wales that the latest corresponding information for Wales is given in "Mental Health Statistics for Wales 1983" published in October 1984.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the Government will compile a list of South African nationals and others involved in activities in breach of the United Nations mandatory arms embargo and deny such persons entry to the United Kingdom;

(2) if any arrangements exist to ensure that foreign nationals involved in activities in breach of the United Nations mandatory arms embargo against South Africa are denied entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: If a person subject to immigration control who was known to have engaged in such activities, sought admission to the United Kingdom, careful consideration would be given to whether his exclusion was conducive to the public good, but the information is not available to enable a definitive list to be compiled.

Firearms

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is, for the latest convenient 12 months period, the number of prosecutions brought for misuse of a weapon licensed under the Firearms Act 1968; and what is the number of convictions secured.

Mr. Mellor: Information collected centrally on court proceedings does not identify those offences involving misuse of a weapon licensed under the Firearms Act 1968. The available information relates to proceedings for offences under the Firearms Act 1968 and the aggregate figures are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables"—for 1983 in Tables S1.1(A), Vol. 1 — magistrates' courts and S1.1(A), Vol. 2 — the Crown Court, under offence classifications 81 and 115.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations concerning the introduction of a self-financing log book system for the registration and control of all firearms.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am not aware of any such representations being submitted, and my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to introduce such a system.

Public Disorder (Wolverhampton)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Billericay on 7 March, about incidents of public disorder in Dudley street, Wolverhampton, on 20 February, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to the ethnic breakdown of the persons involved; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Chief Constable of West Midlands that most of the crowd involved in this incident were black. Of the 22 arrested 13 were black, 8 were white and 1 was Asian.

Departmental Managers (Accounting)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what accounting developments are being made in his Department to give line managers better information about the cost and condition of the capital assets they are managing.

Mr. Brittan: Better information for line managers about the cost and use of capital assets is being provided in the prison department through the new costing system (though there are difficulties arising from the age and nature of the prison estate); and is one of the objectives which is being pursued in the development of a new financial management information system for the Directorate of Telecommunications. Most of the department's non-prisons land and buildings is managed on a cost-centre basis under property repayment services; these arrangements, introduced on 1 April 1983, are designed to achieve greater awareness of the cost of departmental accommodation and associated services.

Immigration (Husbands)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many husbands have been refused entry clearance on medical grounds in each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Waddington: Regular information on reasons for refusal of entry clearance has been collected centrally only for the Indian subcontinent from 1983. Apart from the case which the hon. Member has drawn to my attention, I am not aware of any husband refused entry clearance on medical grounds.

Local Government Elections

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from religious organisations about polling day for the local elections coinciding with Ascension day.

Mr. Mellor: None.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Research Staff

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of staff engaged in research full-time in institutions of higher education, excluding medical schools, who hold (a) tenured posts and (b) untenured posts; and in the case of those who hold untenured posts, how many are excluded by their conditions of employment from their right to redundancy pay, or to challenge unfair dismissal.

Mr. Brooke: The information available relates to all full-time university staff in the United Kingdom engaged in research only. In the academic year 1983-84, there were 10,720 such staff, of whom 982 were wholly university financed. Information is not collected centrally about numbers of tenured and non-tenured posts, nor about the terms of employment of research staff. These matters are for universities themselves, where they are the employers. Comparable information about higher education institutions outside the universities is not available.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of non-medically qualified staff employed full-time in medical research in the different medical schools throughout the United Kingdom; and what information he has as to (a) how many permanent posts are available in the medical schools for such researchers, (b) how many such researchers are employed on a short-term contract basis, and (c) how many medical schools in the United Kingdom include in the conditions of employment in all short-term contracts for such researchers the obligatory waiving of statutory rights to redundancy, unfair dismissal, and so on.

Mr. Brooke: In the academic year 1983-84, 4,898 full-time non-medically qualified academic staff were employed in United Kingdom medical schools, of which 2,153 were wholly university financed. Information is not available centrally to identify those involved in medical research only, nor the number of permanent posts available for them. The granting of short-term contracts and conditions of service are matters for universities themselves where they are the employers.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to the number of staff engaged in (a) scientific and (b) medical research in institutions of higher education, including medical schools, who are supported by research councils; and of these how many are on short-term contracts (i) of five years and (ii) of three years or less;

(2) what information he has as to the number of contract research staff supported on short-term grants by research councils or charitable funding in institutions of higher education, including medical schools, who are engaged in (a) scientific and (b) medical research and who are under 30 years old, between 30 and 35 and over 35; what proportion of each of these categories are women; and how these figures compare with (a) 10 years ago and (b) five years ago.

Mr. Brooke: The research councils award research grants to higher education institutions rather than directly engaging staff required for those grants themselves. I understand from the councils that the numbers of contract research staff currently supported by them on short term grants in higher education institutions are as follows:

	Numbers
AFRC	300
MRC	3,044
NERC	604
SERC	4,557

The above figures include scientific and supporting staff.

There are no central records of the age, sex or length of contract of such staff. Comparative figures for 10 and five years ago are not available; nor is any information about the number of contract staff supported by charitable funding.

PhD Studentships

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of applications from graduates for PhD studentships and post-doctoral fellowships at institutes of higher education curently pending and in respect of such applicants the number who obtained their first degree (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how these figures compare with those of 10 years ago.

Mr. Brooke: This information is not available centrally.

Human Embryo Research

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been spent by the Medical Research Council on human embryo research in each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that in the last four financial years the Medical Research Council estimates that it has spent the following sums on human embryo research:

	£'000
1980-81	840
1981-82	892
1982-83	971
1983-84	990

No figures are available for MRC expenditure on research in this area prior to 1980-81.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Employment what consultation procedure is envisaged regarding the future development of the Health and Safety Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The constitution of the Health and Safety Commission is set out in the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974. These arrangements have in general worked well and there are no plans at present to change them.

Adult Training Strategy

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his statements concerning new training opportunities on 11 March, Official Report, column 49, he will tabulate the numbers and categories of skill places in his reorganisation plans discontinued and those initiated.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The majority of Manpower Services Commission skills training provision is planned and delivered locally in the light of local needs and figures on the precise categories of skill training supported are not available. We are planning to increase substantially the number of people who will benefit from help under these programmes. The table sets out the broad categories under which support will be provided.

Locally delivered adult training

Type of training	Estimated numbers of people starting training
	in 1984-85	in 1985-86
Occupational training for individuals	57,500	54,000
Work preparation	22,000	42,000
Training for enterprise (ie small business training)	6,500	16,000
Access to information	4,500	38,000
Technology	—	—
Local grants to employers:
(1) Local grant aid	n/a	12,000
(2) Recruitment and training packages	n/a	8,000

n/a=Figures not available.

Wages Councils

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the highest and lowest current wage levels set by the wages councils for workers aged 16, 17 and 18 years; and if he will indicate the industries concerned and (b) the highest and lowest current wage levels set by the wages councils for adult workers, and the industry in which they work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows. The rates quoted are full time rates for time workers.

	Highest rate £ per week	Lowest rate £ per week
16-year-old rate*	†59·20	¶29·71
17-year-old rate*	†66·60	¶34·11
Rate payable to 18-year-olds	‡82·65	•37·50
Adult rate	‖97·20	■47·50

* Age pointed rates.
† Laundry.
‡ Rope, twine and net—grade 1 night shift worker aged 18 and over.
‖ Licensed non-residential—club steward in larger London clubs.
¶ Toy manufacturing—new entrant rate for first two months.
• Hairdressing—'all other workers', including shampooists, aged under 20 years.
■ Hairdressing—'all other workers', including shampooists, aged 20 years and over.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest statistics available to his Department on employment in the footwear manufacturing industry as compared with 12 months previously.

Mr. Alan Clark: In December 1984 it is estimated that there were 48,900 employees in employment in the footwear manufacturing industry (class 451 of the 1980 standard industrial classification). The corresponding figure for December 1983 was 50,300.

Service Industries

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have (a) been lost and (b) been created in service industries since March 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics but an indication of net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

Between March and September, the latest date for which figures are available, the estimated number of employees in employment in Great Britain in service industries increased by 75,000.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people unemployed in March 1984 and in March 1985; and what percentage of the population of working age jobless this represents for these two dates.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 8 March 1984 there was a total of 3,142,775 unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, representing an unemployment rate of 13·0 per cent. of all employees and the unemployed. This information is also available from the Library. The figures for March 1985 are not yet available but will be published on 4 April.

While some people of working age who are without jobs and seeking work are excluded from the unemployment count because they are not entitled to benefits, others are included in the count who are not actively seeking work. Household surveys such as the 1983 labour force survey indicate that the two groups broadly offset each other. Details of the position in 1984 will be published in a forthcoming issue of the Employment Gazette.

Pay

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what the average level of pay rises was in the financial year 1983-84; and what they have been so far during 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details on the percentage increase in average gross weekly earnings of employees in Great Britain in the 12 months ending March 1984 are contained in table 5.1 of Employment Gazette, February 1985, a copy of which is in the Library. The latest information, relating to the 12 months ending December 1984, is given in the same table.

Manufacturing Industry (Job Losses)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of jobs lost in manufacturing industry since March 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics but an indication of net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

Between March and December, in Great Britain, the estimated number of employees in employment in manufacturing industries decreased by 17,000.

Unemployment Statistics (Scotland)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment why local unemployment figures for Scotland are not to be published in March.

Mr. Alan Clark: The publication of February's unemployment figures for all local areas in Great Britain, below regional level, was delayed until 15 March. This was because of an error identified, on the day before the intended release date of 7 March, in new computer programmes. These are designed to provide a wider range of local unemployment figures. The existing programmes have been reinstated until the fault has been corrected.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Spandau Prison, West Berlin

Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the military authorities in West Berlin are prepared to take to assure citizens who live in its vicinity that military activities in the grounds of Spandau prison do not constitute a danger.

Mr. Renton: The British Military Government Berlin is prepared to take all action necessary for the safety of citizens living in the British Sector of Berlin. Spandau prison is guarded, in monthly rotation, by soldiers of the four powers. I am not aware that this has posed problems to people living nearby.

Disarmament Conference (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the visit to the conference on disarmament in Geneva by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham, (Mr. Luce) on 12 March.

Mr. Luce: During my visit to Geneva, I had talks with the heads of a number of delegations to the conference on disarmament, including the representatives of the United States and the Soviet Union. I also delivered a speech to the conference in which I called for an urgent and concerted effort now to conclude a total ban on chemical weapons. I drew attention to the issues of verification yet to be resolved.

To add impetus to this work, I presented a new British working paper containing proposals for the routine inspection of civil chemical plants to ensure that under such a ban certain toxic chemicals are not diverted for secret military use. This paper, which builds upon earlier British proposals tabled in 1983 and 1984, was well received. I emphasised that the United Kingdom would continue to play a full part in efforts to advance progress in the negotiations.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Coal Industry Dispute (Convictions)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many convictions there have been under the Mines and Quarries Acts in Scotland, as a result of the offences during the miners' strike.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: None.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what proportion of convictions in Scotland arising from the miners' strike are for (a) crimes and (b) offences.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Incidents reported to procurators fiscal which result in criminal proceedings are not categorised in this fashion.

Coal Industry Dispute (Prosecutions)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many offences and crimes for which arrests have been made in Scotland as a result of incidents connected with the miners' strike have been or are to go before jury trials.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Two cases resulting from incidents connected with the miners' strike have been brought to trial before a sheriff and a jury.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many persons convicted of offences or crimes during the miners' industrial dispute are (a) not resident in Scotland and (b) not miners.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Such information as exists might not be complete and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what proportion of convictions in Scotland as a result of offences during the miners' dispute are for (a) breach of the peace offences, (b) obstruction or other offences under the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 and (c) offences under the Bail (Scotland) Act 1980.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The information requested is not readily available and I will publish the information in the Official Report later.

PRIME MINISTER

Government (Achievements)

Mr. Irving asked the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report the main achievements of Her Majesty's Government since June 1983.

The Prime Minister: Since the 1983 election, the inflation rate has remained low at around 5 per cent.; Gross domestic product has continued to grow; total investment has reached a new all-time high; profits have recovered substantially; retail sales and the standard of living have also hit new peaks. Between June 1983 and September 1984, the estimated number of people in work rose by 453,000.

A major reform of taxation was commenced, with a plan to cut the corporation tax rate to 35 per cent. by 1986-87. The small firms rate has been reduced from 38 per cent. to 30 per cent. Personal tax thresholds for income tax have been raised in real terms, stamp duty has been halved; the national insurance surcharge and the investment income surcharge abolished.

The forces of competition in the economy are being strengthened. Legislation to end the solicitors' conveyancing monopoly and a Bill to introduce competition into the bus industry are before Parliament. A White Paper on airline competition has been published and practical steps, through bilateral agreements, are being taken towards liberalising aviation in Europe. The opticians' monopoly to supply spectacles has been abolished. The financial services White Paper which proposes a new framework for investor protection is also aimed at improving the competitiveness of the financial services industry.

The large programme of privatisation has continued. The successful privatisation of British Telecom in November 1984 was the largest ever flotation and led to a massive increase in the number of people holding shares. Wytch Farm, Enterprise Oil, Sealink, Jaguar, INMOS, Scott Lithgow, and several other smaller public enterprises have also been transferred to the private sector. There has been substantial progress in this direction in respect of British Airways, the royal ordnance factories, the National Bus Company, the warship-building yards of British Shipbuilders, and the remaining Government holding in British Aerospace. The Government have also announced their decision to abolish the British National Oil Corporation.

The Government have launched a more cost-effective and job-related regional industrial policy; has backed the Alvey programme for research into advanced information technology; and has allocated substantial funds for the promotion of new technology.

In transport, London Transport has been transferred from the GLC to London Regional Transport, and targets set for better value for money. Similarly, British Rail, under its new chairman, has been given targets for the reduction of subsidy and the improvement of customer service.

New initiatives have been announced to control drug misuse, and the Government supported the Video Recordings Act to control video nasties. Legislation has been put through for data protection; to provide a framework for the development of cable television; to set out a new framework for police powers and for handling complaints against the police, in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act; and to enhance both the powers available to deal with terrorism and the safeguards for the citizen under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. Measures have been taken to ensure that the terms of imprisonment served by violent offenders fully reflect society's abhorrence of their crimes.

In education the Government have launched a major initiative to raise standards in schools including the publication of broad curricula objectives for the 5 to 16 age group, the reform of the 16-plus examination system, and the decision to introduce records of achievement for school leavers of all abilities. The technical and vocational education initiative had been introduced to boost practical elements in the 14 to 18 curriculum. The council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education has been established to evaluate teacher training courses and a discussion paper on school teacher numbers and deployment in the longer term has been published. In higher education, record numbers of students were admitted in the academic year 1984, and the Government endorsed plans which provide for a continuation of the significant shift towards science and engineering and other subjects in the public sector of higher education.

In the social security field, the Government have maintained the protection of social security benefits against inflation. The retirement pension is at a record real level. Legislation has been introduced to improve the position of early-leavers from pension schemes, and proposals have been set out to encourage personal portable pensions. The Government have launched the most far-reaching review of social security provisions since Beveridge.

In the Health Service, we have continued to develop services for patients and waiting lists have fallen. NHS spending has been maintained at record levels, and the drive for better management continues with the appointment of General Managers throughout the Health Service.

The youth training scheme has given new training opportunities to some 700,000 young people since it was launched in 1983. The number of adults benefiting from training programmes is being doubled. The enterprise allowance scheme has been expanded.

The Trades Union Act was passed extending the rights of members of trades unions to influence the affairs of their unions.

In energy, Government policies on taxation and licensing have made 1984 a record year for oil and gas exploration and development in the North sea, and the North sea contribution to United Kingdom employment has been further expanded. New reserves of gas have made it possible to scale down the need for imports for the years ahead. With Government support the electricity and coal industries have enabled the electricity system to withstand a year-long coal strike without power cuts and with only limited damage to the rest of British industry.

In local government, the Rates Act is protecting ratepayers from huge increases in rates in the highest spending councils. The Bill to abolish the GLC and the metropolitan county council is making good progress. The right to buy their homes has been extended to more council tenants, discount terms have been improved for many, and assistance has been provided to the owners of defective houses previously in the public sector. We are consulting on proposals to increase competitive tendering by councils.

In the environment, research into acid rain is increasing and steps have been taken to end the pollution of our rivers, estuaries and beaches. The successful international garden festival was mounted in Liverpool, and other disused land in the inner cities brought into use. Fourteen new enterprise zones have been designated.

In defence, the capability of our armed forces has continued to be strengthened by further increases in the defence budget. The Government have played their full part in implementing NATO's 1979 decision to modernise intermediate range nuclear weapons. Increased efficiency is being pursued by the continuing transfer of resources from the support areas to the frontline, and by introducing increased competition in defence contracts and promoting collaboration with our international partners. Finally a major re-organisation of the headquarters structure of the Ministry of Defence has been introduced.

In foreign policy, the Government have maintained Britain's strong commitment to the NATO alliance. British Ministers and representatives have been active in building up an east-west dialogue, with high level visits in both directions, and in promoting the arms control process. Within the European Community the Government achieved a refund for 1983 of £430 million; a lasting settlement on budgetary imbalances, under which our net contribution will be reduced by about half; measures to control Community spending, especially on agriculture; and the successful conclusion of the third Lome convention. An agreement was signed with China last December about the future of Hong Kong. Over Gibraltar an agreement was reached with Spain in February, and the border is now open.

Mr. Peter Levene

Mr. Evennett asked the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the basis on which Mr. Peter Levene is being appointed to be Chief of Defence Procurement in the Ministry of Defence.

The Prime Minister: On 19 December last my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced the appointment, with my approval, of Mr. Peter Levene to be Chief of Defence Procurement in the Ministry of Defence.

At the time it was believed both by the Government and by the Civil Service Commissioners that Mr. Levene's appointment as Chief of Defence Procurement would be by way of secondment from an outside organisation and would thus fall outside the ambit of the Civil Service Order in Council 1982 and that the Civil Service Commissioners did not need to be asked to consider the issue of a certificate of qualification for Mr. Levene. This belief was based on practice and conventions of long standing.

Legal advice has recently been received to the effect that appointments by secondment do not fall outside the ambit of the Order in Council, and that the requirements of the Order in Council must be satisfied in relation to secondments as in relation to other appointments.

Measures are being taken to provide that future appointments to the Home Civil Service and to the Diplomatic Service which take the form of secondment from an outside organisation are made in compliance with the Civil Service Order in Council and any regulations made thereunder.

In relation to the case of Mr. Levene, who is regarded by the Ministry of Defence (as the Civil Service Commissioners have been told) as exceptionally well-qualified by ability and experience to carry out the functions of the Chief of Defence Procurement, the position is that his appointment was made and announced three months ago in the belief by all concerned that it fell outside the ambit of the Order in Council. The recent legal advice is that the belief was mistaken. In the meantime, on the basis of the public faith so pledged, both the Ministry of Defence and Mr. Levene have entered into arrangements to enable the appointment to be put into effect, which it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to undo.

In these wholly exceptional circumstances the Civil Service Commissioners have reviewed the matter, and are satisfied that it is desirable that Mr. Levene's appointment should proceed without the issue of a certificate of qualification, under the provisions of article 1(2)(g) of the Order in Council.

Mr. Levene will now be appointed under a fixed term contract not exceeding five years, and not by secondment from an outside organisation.

Teachers

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister if she will compare the pupil to teacher ratio in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1984 with the pupil to other persons or non-teachers employed ratio in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1984 in actual and full-time equivalent terms.

The Prime Minister: The available information is shown in the following table for the United Kingdom.

	1978-79	1983-84
Pupils per teacher*
Maintained primary	22·9	22·0
Maintained secondary	16·5	16·0
Pupils and further education
Students per non-teaching support staff*†	22·8	23·3

* Ratios have been calculated from full-time plus full-time equivalent of part-time numbers, for pupils, students and staff.

† The breakdown of non-teaching support staff employed by local education authorities between the school and further education sectors is not available.

Drugs (Patents)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the relative roles and nature of the co-operation between the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Health and Social Security on the question of possible extensions to patent life for the research and development of drugs.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible for patent law. Before formulating policy it seeks the views of its Standing Advisory Committee on which both users and industry are represented as well as other Government Departments concerned. The Department of Trade and Industry is awaiting a paper on a possible extension of patent life from the pharmaceutical industry. The Standing Advisory Committee and the Department of Health and Social Security (both as sponsoring Department and that responsible for the National Health Service) will then be asked for their views.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister what the loss of revenue would be if income tax and national insurance thresholds were raised to £60 per week for a single person and £120 per week for a married couple; what would be the savings in revenue if all benefits, including child benefit, were discontinued for any single person whose income from any source was £50 or a married couple whose income was £100; and what would be the loss or gain to the Revenue if these measures were enacted simultaneously.

The Prime Minister: I regret that this information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Teachers' Dispute

Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Prime Minister, following her answer to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 14 March, Official Report, column 434, about the teachers' dispute, if she will make a further statement.

The Prime Minister: I am pleased to confirm that members of the National Union of Teachers at Exhall Grange school were not on strike last week. I am delighted that, unlike teachers at some other special schools where industrial action is taking place, they are continuing to carry out their difficult and demanding duties.

I very much regret any embarrassment or offence to the teachers of this school which may have followed from my statement last Thursday. The misunderstanding arose because publicity material from the National Union of Teachers was in error. It was Exhall school which was affected; Exhall Grange school was not.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Students (Supplementary Benefit)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to cease payment of supplementary benefit during holiday periods to students in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. I cannot however predict whether any changes may be proposed as a result of the current review of social security.

Kinsale Gas

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if any revised proposal to bring Kinsale gas to Newry and Belfast has been submitted to him; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: I have not received any such proposal. However, I understand that a revised Kinsale gas scheme is being considered by a number of the industry's undertakings.

Tourism

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures the Government are preparing to help the tourist industry in Northern Ireland, following the publication of their discussion paper on tourism prepared by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Department of Economic Development.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1985, c. 125.]: The Department of Economic Development is reviewing existing measures of financial assistance to the tourist industry and the main purpose in publishing the discussion paper is to stimulate an informed response from those involved in tourism, which it is hoped will be helpful to Government in establishing future tourist policy guidelines.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Marine

4. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to halt the continuing decline in the size of the British merchant marine.

Mr. Ridley: I am pursuing vigorously the recent progress by officials from the USA and the states in the Consultative Shipping Group on co-ordinated action against protectionism in shipping. I am pressing for swift action on the shipping measures proposed earlier this month to the Council of Ministers by the European Commission. I am in close touch with the General Council of British Shipping on all points it has raised for Government action.

Road Improvements (West London)

8. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what money was spent on road improvements in west London in (a) 1981, (b) 1982, (c) 1983, (d) 1984 and (e) 1985 in real terms; what is projected for 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Such figures as I have are as follows. Over the whole period, cash expenditure on roads that are the Secretary of State's responsibility will total over £33 million, reflecting our continuing commitment to improve the A40 and the North Circular Road.

Financial Year	£ million
1981-82	6·0
1982-83	11·4
1983-84	8·8
1984-85	3·4

Estimates for the next 3 financial years are:

	£ million
1985-86	1·4
1986-87	1·0
1987-88	1·5

Bus Industry

10. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his view of the bus industry has changed following the publication of the Transport Committee report on financing public transport.

Mr. Ridley: The Select Committee report acknowledged the serious state of the bus industry and suggested as an alternative policy competitive tendering for all services. This is a much more restrictive system even than the present one; and will not secure the gains in productivity, and—more important—the concentration on the needs of the passenger, which deregulation will provide.

We will reply to the report as soon as possible.

Bus Services (Rural Areas)

15. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Transport how the level of bus services in the rural trial area of Hereford and Worcester has compared with bus services in rural areas elsewhere since the trial was established.

Mr. Ridley: Bus vehicle kilometres on country routes in the trial area are estimated to have risen 2 per cent. since the trial was established. During the same period vehicle kilometres in the whole of the county of Hereford and Worcester declined by 12 per cent. and in rural Cumbria by 9 per cent. (Comprehensive figures for rural services for the country as a whole are not available.)]

Air Fares

16. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his further plans to discuss European air fares with his counterparts in European Economic Community countries and other European countries.

Mr. Ridley: I am planning a major effort, in the EC and bilaterally, to build on our successes with the Dutch and West Germans last year. We are meeting Italy, Switzerland, France and Luxembourg to start with.

Bus Services (Cumbria)

17. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Cumbria county council on the deregulation of bus services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a written response from Cumbria county council to the White Paper on Buses, and they also commented on six of the seven consultation documents which my Department subsequently issued.

M25 (Denham-Poyle)

18. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects that the section of the M25 between Denham and Poyle will be open to traffic.

Mrs. Chalker: In September, when the section of the motorway itself from Poyle to the M4 is due to be completed. However, the connecting roads between the M25 and M4 are not due for completion until June 1986.

South Yorkshire

19. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from inhabitants of the county of south Yorkshire about the maintenance of public transport for rural or semi-rural communities.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of representations from inhabitants of south Yorkshire; some of which have dealt with travel in rural areas.

C5 Pedal Cycle

20. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of accidents in which the C5 electrically assisted pedal cycle has been involved to date.

Mrs. Chalker: To date one accident only involving a C5 cycle has been reported to my Department.

Wheel Clamp

21. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about extending the use of the wheel clamp to further areas.

Mrs. Chalker: I have received no formal requests, though some interest has been expressed.

Large Oil Tankers (Routes)

22. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report on progress towards specifying designated routes for large crude oil carrying tankers west of the Hebrides and clear of the Minch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that when new editions of the principal charts of the area are published later this year, the Hydrographer of the Navy intends to have marked on them the exact limits of the area now surveyed to modern standards and to include a note stating that deep draught vessels should keep within that area if possible.

London Regional Transport (Unit Costs)

23. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made, in consultation with the chairman of London Regional Transport, in reviewing the target for reductions in unit costs which London Regional Transport was set on 20 July 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department maintains a close interest in LRT's measures to reduce costs and improve productivity. I shall be reviewing progress with the chairman shortly, when considering LRT's plans for next year and succeeding years. So far, LRT have made good progress in reducing unit costs, as their annual business plan shows.

Channel Link

24. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the report of the Anglo-French working party on the Channel link.

Mr. David Mitchell: The report of the working party consists of draft guidelines for prospective promoters of a fixed link. I expect to meet my French counterpart on 20 March to agree a final text and arrange for the guidelines to be made available as speedily as possible.

Road Repairs (Severe Weather)

25. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has received from his Department and local authorities as to the additional cost of repairs to roads damaged by the recent severe winter weather; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None. It is probably too early for realistic estimates to be prepared.

MOT Testing Stations (Safety)

26. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the safety record of the Ministry of Transport testing and garage industry.

Mrs. Chalker: Safety in MOT testing stations is the responsibility of the operators under the surveillance of the Health and Safety Executive or the local authority. It is of course influenced by the procedures and equipment prescribed by the Department which aim to follow good modern practice.

British Rail (Electrification)

27. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision on British Rail's application for approval of investment in (a) the construction of the Windsor link, Manchester and (b) the electrification of the Preston-Manchester line.

Mr. David Mitchell: An investment proposal for the Windsor link was submitted by British Rail last week. British Rail has not sought approval to electrify the Preston to Manchester line.

Buses

28. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with his policy towards bus services in the light of the Transport Committee report on financing transport services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) and my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) earlier today.

Concessionary Fares

29. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect he expects the planned £48 million reduction in concessionary fares subsidies to have on concessionary fares.

Mrs. Chalker: Subsidies for concessionary fares are the responsibility of local authorities, which are free to determine their priorities within the resources available. In 1984-85, they chose to budget for concessionary fares expenditure in England totalling some £56 million more than the public expenditure provision. The 1985-86 provision has been maintained in real terms at the same level as in previous years.

London Regional Transport (Three-year Strategy)

30. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when London Regional Transport is going to publish, for consultation with local authorities, its three-year strategy.

Mrs. Chalker: That is a matter for London Regional Transport management, but I understand that London Regional Transport intend to publish a consultation document very shortly, with a view to publishing a final three year strategy statement before the end of June.

Post Bus Services

31. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with the Post Office the future of post bus services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My hon. Friend the Minister of State met the chairman of the Post Office in June last year. Our proposals in the Transport Bill should provide continued support to the introduction and maintenance of post bus services.

Motorway Repairs (Lane Rental)

32. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the results of his experiments in lane rental for motorway repairs.

Mrs. Chalker: Of the four schemes introduced in 1984-85, three have finished ahead of the projected completion date. The fourth is still in progress but running late. Further experiments are planned for 1985-86.

Coastal Shipping

33. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to take powers to reserve coastal shipping to British ships.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The policy of this Government is to press for the opening up of foreign cabotage trades to British vessels. In pursuit of this goal, we shall be supporting proposals for the liberalisation of shipping markets within the EEC which have recently been made by the Commission of the European Communities.

Departmental Manpower

34. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport what were the numbers of technical and administrative staff, employed full-time by his Department on metropolitan county issues at headquarters and at regional offices in June 1983 and at the present time; and what is the comparable number planned for April 1986.

Mrs. Chalker: Some 140 staff (full-time equivalents) were employed on metropolitan county business in June 1983, and a similar number are currently so employed. Staffing levels at April 1986 will depend on prevailing workloads but will be contained within overall manpower targets.

Merchant Shipbuilding

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many trading ships over 500 gross registered tons were ordered in 1984 for United Kingdom ownership and registration (a) in United Kingdom yards and (b) in foreign yards; what in each case was the total deadweight; and if he will estimate what number and deadweight of orders would have been necessary to keep the fleet at its present size.

Mr. Ridley: The number and total deadweight tonnage of trading ships over 500 gross registered tonnes ordered for United Kingdom registration in 1984 were:

	Number of Vessels	Thousand deadweight tons (estimated)
United Kingdom yards	8	85
Foreign yards	4	19

We do not have the information requested on ownership because the owner of a vessel is not known until registration takes place. It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the orders which would be required for a particular size of fleet because the size of a fleet is determined by the purchases of second-hand vessels and other changes in registration, as well as deliveries of new tonnage.

Heavy Vehicles (Side Guards)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken by his Department to persuade operators of heavy commercial vehicles to fit side guards; what steps have been taken to ensure that the law in this respect is being complied with; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Side guards have been required since October 1983 to be fitted on all new lorries exceeding 3,500 kilograms gross weight, and on all new trailers exceeding 1,020 kilograms unladen weight. They are also required to be fitted on any semi-trailer regardless of date of manufacture, whose gross weight exceeds 26,000 kilograms if it is attached to a tractor whose plated gross train weight exceeds 32,520 kilograms. There are already many heavy lorries on the roads with side guards fitted and the numbers are growing year by year as new vehicles replace older ones taken out of service.

Enforcement of vehicle construction and use requirements generally is a police responsibility, but it is also carried out by the Department's vehicle examiners, especially at the Heavy Goods Vehicle Testing Stations when vehicles are brought in for their annual test. We have no evidence of non-compliance on any significant scale.

Disabled People (Transport)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the London Regional Transport board to prepare a co-ordinated policy regarding the provision of transport for disabled people.

Mrs. Chalker: London Regional Transport is developing its policies towards transport provision for disabled people. I understand that it hopes to be in a position to issue a public statement of its policies in the next few months.

Okehampton Bypass

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria govern the payment of legal and other costs from public funds of inquiries into road schemes proposed by his Department; and what will be the contribution by his Department into costs associated with the proposed Okehampton bypass.

Mrs. Chalker: Costs incurred by the Department in holding public inquiries into road schemes are borne by the Department as a result of the Secretary of State's functions under the Highways Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1972.

The criteria for the payment of objectors' costs where appropriate are set out in MHLF circular 73/65, a copy of which is in the Library.

The Department's contribution into costs associated with the proposed Okehampton bypass cannot be assessed until the present proceedings have been concluded.

Grant Applications

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many projects are awaiting a decision about a grant application under section 65 of the Transport Act 1968 (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the north west.

Mrs. Chalker: I have agreed to pay grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 on 11 existing public transport projects which were previously supported through TSG.

Several new schemes, including the refurbishment of Moore lane bus station in Bolton which my hon. Friend referred to in his question of 18 February, have been suggested as possible candidates for grant.

A draft circular outlining the criteria which will apply to such projects, has been sent to the local authority associations for their views. Once the circular has been issued local authorities will be able to submit grant applications for projects which meet the criteria.

Snow Hill Tunnel

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a decision on British Rail's proposal to re-open the Snow Hill tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: Shortly.

Subsidised Bus Services (Tendering)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to publish his code of practice for tendering for subsidised bus services.

Mr. David Mitchell: We intend to publish the code of practice once the Transport Bill has received Royal Assent.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport which bodies he is consulting with regard to his proposed code of practice for tendering for subsidised bus services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I shall over the coming months be consulting local authority associations, representatives of bus operators, relevant professional organisations and representatives of consumers and other interested groups.

Road Construction

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet responded to the Civil Engineering Economic Development Committee's report, "A Fairer and Faster Route to Major Road Construction."

Mr. Ridley: I made an interim response to the report when I met the civil engineering EDC this morning. I am anxious to make faster progress with road building but the interests of people affected must be safeguarded and we must ensure that we get value for money. I am actively exploring possible improvements. I hope to announce final collusions by the autumn.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Misuse of Drugs

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's new publicity campaign in relation to the misuse of drugs; what arrangements are being made to monitor the effect of the campaign; and what is expected to be its total cost.

Mr. John Patten: on 27 February my right hon. Friend announced the launch of a campaign of information and education to help to prevent drug misuse, and particularly heroin misuse. This complements the various drug treatment initiatives already undertaken by the Department.

The campaign is a product of discussions in the interdepartmental Ministerial group on the misuse of drugs and will form one part of the Goverment's plans to prevent drug misuse in conjunction with the activities of Home Office, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, Department of Education and Science and the other United Kingdom Health Departments.

The first stage of the campaign is aimed at getting better information to parents and professionals in particular. As announced on 27 February, three leaflets for parents have been widely distributed to all general practitioners, health authorities, family practitioner committees, community health councils and local authorities — and are now available. Newspaper advertising in mid-March will help to ensure that all parents are aware of the leaflets. In addition the Central Office of Information has produced two short TV public information films which BBC and IBA have agreed to show.

The second part and main thrust of the campaign will be aimed specifically at young people. Ministers took the decision to pursue such a campaign only after intensive qualitative research by an independent company, Andrew Irving Associates. This asked whether a campaign should be mounted at all, whether there were significant dangers of a counter-productive effect and what messages and modes of delivery might be best received by young people. Their research found that most young people were already aware of illegal drugs — particularly heroin — but that they were often misinformed of the real dangers. They found no reason why young people should not respond to a careful presentation of the facts. They also recommended that any campaign would maximise its positive effects by concentrating on heroin: because it represented the greatest threat and because it would be extremely difficult to convey an accurate message about misuse of all drugs.

An advertising agency Yellowhammer Co. Ltd. was commissioned to develop the campaign and has been working closely with both the initial researchers and another company, Cragg Ross and Dawson Research Partnership, to identify and test the most effective messages and presentation. Careful fieldwork takes time and this second part of the campaign will start towards the end of April when TV advertisements will begin to appear in a series of showings over the next year. Our approach will present the real consequences — mental, physical, social, financial—of taking heroin.

In order to monitor the effectiveness of the campaign a market research agency, Research Bureau Limited, have been commissioned to establish baseline data on young people's attitudes before the campaign starts and, periodically, to evaluate any changes in attitude as the campaign proceeds. In this way, we shall have the information with which to consider adjustments to the emphasis of the campaign for optimum results. Monitoring will also enable us to decide whether and how the campaign might continue in subsequent years.

On the question of cost, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) on 13 December at columns 585-86. It is expected that some £2 million will be expended on the campaign and related initiatives before the end of 1985-86 — including the production of a supportive video training package for professionals along the lines of the Department's award winning solvent misuse package, "Illusions".

Pensioners (Energy Costs)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the percentage of income spent on heating and on electricity by (a) single pensioners in receipt of state pension benefits, (b) married pensioners in receipt of state pension benefits, in (i) May 1979, (ii) May 1984 and (iii) the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the percentage of gross normal weekly income spent in 1979 and in 1983 (the latest date for which figures are available) on fuel light and power (including electricity), and, separately, on electricity alone, by single pensioner households and by married couple pensioner households respectively.

	Expenditure as percentage of income
	Single pensioner household		Married couple pensioner household
	1979	1983	1979	1983
Fuel, light and power	10·5	10·8	7·6	7·8
Electricity	4·5	4·7	3·3	3·3

Sources: Family Expenditure Survey, 1979 and 1983.

Housing Benefits

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has recently received from pensioners and pension organisations regarding the effect of revised tapers to housing benefits.

Mr. Whitney: Since 1 January the Department has received a number of letters from pensioners and pension organisations about the social security changes introduced in November. Some of these were about changes in housing benefit but only a very few specifically mentioned the revised tapers to housing benefits.

British Pensioners (Foreign Reciprocal Agreements)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services with which countries there are reciprocal agreements whereby British pensioners, now living in those countries, are in receipt of indexed pension payments.

Mr. Whitney: There are 29 countries with which the United Kingdom has social security agreements which enable increases in retirement pensions to be paid to our pensioners. They are as follows:

Austria
Belgium
Bermuda
Cyprus
Denmark
Federal Republic of Germany
France
Gibraltar
Greece
Guernsey
Iceland
Irish Republic
Isle of Man
Israel
Italy
Jamaica Jersey
Luxembourg

Malta
Mauritius
Portugal
Sark
Spain
Switzerland
The Netherlands
The Philippines
Turkey
United States of America
Yugoslavia

The reciprocal agreements with Iceland and the Philippines were signed on 25 August 1983 and 27 February 1985 respectively. Retirement pension increases will be paid to our pensioners in these countries when the agreements are ratified by the Governments concerned in each case.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the meeting on 5 March with the trades unions to discuss the future of the resettlement units and re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: At the meeting with the Departmental trade union side held on 5 March we discussed the content of my hon. Friend's announcement on 5 February at columns 548-9 on the future of resettlement units and re-establishment centres and in particular the regional consultation programme which is shortly to be launched.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how present salary levels of occupational therapists in the National Health Service compare with those that existed in 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The minimum and maximum basic pay rates at 1 April 1984 for occupational therapists were between 59 per cent. and 81 per cent. and higher than those which applied at 1 April 1979, according to grade.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing for each area in Wales the level of board and lodging payments being made in that area.

Mr. Whitney: A list of the supplementary benefit local limits for board and lodging payments was placed in the Library last November.

Commuting (Health Effects)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a response on behalf of the Government to the report of the European foundation for the improvement of living and working conditions on the effects of commuting on health, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. John Patten: No. The report relates to only one of a series of research studies in related fields conducted by the European Foundation in Dublin and since it neither relates to United Kingdom experience nor makes recommendations, it calls for no response from us.

Attendance Allowance

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of awards of attendance allowances at (a) the lower rate and (b) the upper rate, after review in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The number of successful reviews for the years 1979 to 1983 is contained in "Social Security Statistics 1984" table 14.22. The number for 1984 is 23,184. Separate figures are not kept of the rate of the award following review.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applicants have been refused attendance allowance at (a) the lower rate and (b) the higher rate in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The number of rejections for the years 1979 to 1983 is contained in "Social Security Statistics 1984" table 14.05. The number for 1984 is 58,004. Applications for the allowance do not specify which of the two rates is being sought.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been expended nationally on attendance allowances in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information is contained in the Government's recent Public Expenditure White Paper, "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88" Cmnd. 9428 Vol. II page 166 table 3.12.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of attendance allowance beneficiaries at the lower and higher rates, respectively, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information for the years 1979 to 1983 is contained in "Social Security Statistics 1984" table 14.30. The numbers for 1984 are: higher rate 192,000; lower rate 277,000.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what safeguards there are to ensure that delegated medical practitioners make proper and full examinations in relation to claims for attendance allowance and take into account claimants' personal circumstances.

Mr. Newton: Medical examinations for attendance allowance are usually made by fee-paid medical practitioners trained to complete the requisite report form. This form is designed to obtain clinical information and attention and supervision needs. It includes the claimant's own statement of what needs to be done for him.

Decisions are normally made by delegated medical practitioners on behalf of the Attendance Allowance Board on the basis of the evidence provided in each case.

The general quality of reports made by examining medical officers is monitored by the regional senior medical officer who also, with the Attendance Allowance Board, monitors the quality of decisions made by the delegated medical practitioners. In some difficult cases, decisions may be made by the board itself.

Dunston Hill Hospital

Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the expected life of the various individual buildings comprising Dunston hill hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that Dunston hill hospital has a long-term future. The hon. Member will need to contact the health authority direct for detailed information.

Departmental Managers (Accounting)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what accounting developments are being made in his Department to give line managers better information about the cost and condition of the capital assets they are managing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

General Practitioners (Fees)

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the arrangements whereby general practitioners are able to claim an annual fee of £8·55 per patient by completing form FP1001 even where that patient is receiving contraceptive guidance, advice and treatment from a family planning clinic.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: These arrangements are the product of longstanding contractual arrangements.

This fee, which is paid by quarterly instalment, should represent payment for services over the course of 12 months. It is payable when the doctor accepts a patient, gives advice and conducts any necessary examination, and where appropriate prescribes contraceptives and provides any follow-up care. The fee is also payable where the doctor takes the necessary steps to determine a method of choice and accepts responsibility for any necessary care but advises the patient to attend an NHS clinic for the fitting of an occlusive cap or an intrauterine device.

When a doctor ceases to provide contraceptive services to the patient, for example when an NHS clinical takes over these responsibilities, we expect the doctor to notify the family practitioner committee and payment of the contraceptive service fee should cease.

Aspartame

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the medicines which currently contain the intense sweetener Aspartame.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information about formulations of individual products is of commercial value and is given to the licensing authority in confidence. There are in fact no medicinal products containing aspartame currently being marketed in the United Kingdom.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from hospital consultants since publication of the limited list advocating a system whereby doctors in clinical charge of a patient may prescribe medications not on the limited list on a named patient basis, in cases where the patient is known to have an intolerance of the equivalent drug on the limited list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's replies to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), and my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 12 March at columns 136-138. No hospital consultants can be identified amongst the small number of doctors who have made representations about prescribing medicines not on the selected list.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he proposes to allow the composition of the limited drugs list to be reviewed on a national basis to take account of changes in medical practice or developments in medical knowledge.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on 12 March at column 106.

NHS (Pay Scales)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons working in the National Health Service are paid less than at a full-time rate of £80 a week; how many of these are full-time or part-time; how many in each case are paid, respectively, £10, £20, £30 or £40 and less than £80 a week; and what would be the cost of raising the incomes of all these persons to £80 a week.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unemployment Review Officers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many local offices of his Department there is a full-time unemployment review officer.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I am able to say that 850 posts are presently allocated for unemployment review work in the Department's 453 local offices.

Re-establishment Centres

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many trainees are currently in re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: The number of trainees attending re-establishment centres in England and Wales on 12 February 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, was 262.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions have taken place between his Department and the voluntary sector over the closure of re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: The closure of resettlement units, which I think the hon. Member has in mind, is the subject of a process of consultation which is just beginning. A consultative letter has already been sent to voluntary organisations, local authorities and other interested bodies seeking their views on future provision for people without a settled way of life. Consultation will also be carried out locally by review teams within each social security region.

In the case of re-establishment centres, which generally share premises with resettlement units, a closure decision has been taken in the light of the increased provision made by the Manpower Services Commission in recent years.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the re-establishment centres in England and Wales, indicating how many staff and what categories are employed in each centre.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the names of the re-establishment centres in England and Wales and the number and grades of staff employed on re-establishment work in each centre:

Name of Centre	Grade of Staff
	HEO	EO	CO	CA/Typist	Workshop Supervisors	Cooks	Resettlement Service Officers	Total

Note:
Some of the staff shown above are also engaged on work other than re-establishment.

Unemployed Persons (Retraining)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services following the closure of resettlement centres, what alternatives for retraining will be available to the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Whitney: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the closure of re-establishment centres which deal with the long-term unemployed and I, therefore, refer him to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 1 March at columns 338-39.

Health Education Council

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the funding programmes of the Health Education Council are distributed as between the regional health authority areas.

Mr. John Patten: The Health Education Council's funds are mainly allocated to activities undertaken at national level, although some funding is reserved for regional or local initiatives. Among these in 1984-85, £91,000 was allocated to the council's coronary heart disease project in Wales, £69,500 to the Avon council on alcoholism and £41,000 to the North East council on alchololism, and £14,000 for the joint funding with Mersey regional health authority of a regional health promotion officer post. In addition grants are made each year to district health authorities to support the cost of seconding health education officers to health education diploma courses, and in 1984-85, £250,000 was allocted for this purpose.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of the members of the Health Education Council, indicating in each case their regional health authority areas of residence.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows:

There is currently one vacant place on the council following the resignation of Mr. Richard Parish, who lived within the area of Mersey regional health authority.

Medicines Commission

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to add a representative of a firm manufacturing natural medicines to the Medicines Commission advising him in the practice of medicine.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will bear the suggestion in mind when making new appointments. Members of the commission are not, however, appointed to represent some particular interest, but rather for their individual capacity for sound and impartial judgment based upon expertise and wide experience in a field of activity relevant to the administration of the Medicines Act 1968.

Opticians (Dispensing)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is considering mounting a publicity campaign on the public's rights with regard to dispensing by opticians under the Health and Social Security Act 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We see no justification for using scarce National Health Service resources for an expensive advertising campaign to supplement the wide Press coverage that has already been attracted by the Government measures to improve competition in the supply and dispensing of spectacles.

Overseas Pharmaceutical Production Plants

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many inspectors of good manufacturing practice are available for inspection of pharmaceutical production plants outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are 21 inspectors (20 from our Department; one from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) available for inspection of pharmaceutical production plants outside and inside the United Kingdom. Inspections cover products for both human and veterinary use.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many inspections of overseas pharmaceutical production plants were undertaken in the latest 12 months for which data are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: 121 overseas pharmaceutical production plants were inspected under the Medicines Act in the 12 months ending 31 December 1984.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why the National Health Service pays for the sales promotion expenditure of companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme at the rate of 9 per cent. of the value of the industry's sales to the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme will be next reviewed; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether expenditure on advertising expended by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry in opposing his limited drugs list proposals will be an allowable expense within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(4) pursuant to his reply of 28 February, Official Report, column 273, why allowable sales promotion expenditure of companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme is to be reduced to 9 per cent. of the industry's sales to the National Health Service; how the current figure of 10 per cent. was arrived at; when he next plans to review its level; and if he will make a statement;

(5) pursuant to the reply of 28 February, Official Report, column 272, if he will list the expenses incurred by general practitioners which fall within those described as directly reimbursed expenses; how general practitioners claim such expenses; and if he will make a statement;

(6) pursuant to his reply of 28 February, Official Report, column 272, if he will itemise the services, in respect of which general practitioners were reimbursed indirectly £9,290 in 1983-84; if he will describe the system by which this money is claimed and paid; and if he will make a statement;

(7) pursuant to his replies of 25 February, Official Report, column 71, and 28 February, Official Report, column 272, what steps his Department took in the latest year for which complete returns are available to satisfy itself that expenditure incurred by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme on representatives, advertising, literature and information items was reasonable; when the last comprehensive review of such expenditure took place; and if he will make a statement;

(8) pursuant to his reply of 28 February, Official Report, column 273, if he will explain the nature of the ad hoc formula which is used to control sales promotion expenditure within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; how the formula is applied; what are its components; and if he will make a statement;

(9) pursuant to his answer of 9 January, Official Report, column 497, what steps his Department takes to satisfy itself that gifts offered by drugs companies and received by general practitioners do not contravene the advice given by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry; and if he will make a statement;

(10) how he satisfies himself that expenditure on representatives by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme is reasonable; what assumptions he makes for this purpose about the level and manner of the remuneration of representatives; what is the source of the information upon which he bases these assumptions; and if he will make a statement;

(11) pursuant to his reply of 28 February, Official Report, column 272, what was the average total sum which general practitioners actually received from the National Health Service and from all other sources of public money for which he has responsibility, by way of income, fees, expenses or any other payments (a) in the period from 1 April 1983 to 31 December 1983 (grossed up to give an annual figure) and (b) in the year from 1 January 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Public Laboratories

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what medical bodies he intends to consult while considering his proposal to transfer the public health laboratory service's 52 regional and area laboratories to the administration of health authorities.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1985, c. 330]: It is our intention to consult a wide range of professional bodies and organisations on the report of the review of the public health laboratory service (PHLS). All major medical bodies and others with an interest in the work of the PHLS will be included in this consultation. The list of these bodies is not finalised.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he will make available to health authorities to enable them to continue recruitment of well-trained consultants to the laboratories of the public health laboratory service and to maintain a clinical microbiological service, a public health microbiological service and co-ordination for national epidemiological work in the 52 laboratories if they are to administer them in the future.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1985, c. 330]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 4 March at column 414. No decision on whether to implement any of the recommendations contained in the report of the review of the public health laboratory service will be taken until the consultation exercise referred to in my earlier reply has been completed.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in which spheres of research the public health laboratory service and the Department of Health and Social Security are currently working jointly.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1985, c. 330]: The public health laboratory service board carries out a wide range of research on behalf of the National Health Service and the Department. The major projects currently in progress are:

- Inactivation of haemorrhagic fever viruses by beta-propiolactone;
- Human Growth Hormone production;
- Use of microbial enzymes as diagnostic reagents for the determination of drug levels in blood;
- Production of anthrax vaccine;
- Studies on heat inactivation of hepatitis A virus with special reference to shellfish;
- Initial evaluation work of AIDS screening tests to assess which will be most suitable for use in the National Health Service;
- A study of human hydatid disease;
- A study of the malthus conductivity monitoring system for routine blood cultures in a clinical microbiology laboratory;
- A pilot study for monitoring the DHSS rubella immunisation campaign;
- An epidemiological study of the relationships of AIDS in patients with disorders of blood coagulation to its possible acquisition through treatment with blood products.

WALES

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements are in hand to ensure that his Department complies with the monitoring and positive action recommendations of the draft code of the Equal Opportunities Commission following the publication on 9 February 1984 of the "Programme of Action on Women in the Civil Service."

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Existing joint management and trade union machinery is being used at Departmental and national level to review such matters as promotion, training and the incidence of part-time working. A joint management/trade union working party is being set up within my Department to consider the programme of action and its implications. All staff without discrimination are encouraged to attend internal developmental training courses and to make use of training opportunities provided through the Civil Service college.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost of looking after ancient monuments in Wales; how much is received by admission fees; what is the average admission fee; and what is its subsidy.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During the financial year 1984-85, the costs of maintenance, restoration and provision of services at monuments in the care of my right hon. Friend are estimated at £1·06 million [excluding staffing costs and other overheads]. The estimated amount received from admission fees during that period is £0·8 million. The average admission charge is 55 pence. Expenditure on looking after the monuments is not directly dependent on the level of admission receipts and there is, therefore, no separate allocation in the form of a subsidy.

Public Health Facilities

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to make any changes to the provision of public health facilities in Wales at regional and area level; and if he will make a statement regarding the continued availability of such services as are now provided at the public health laboratory at the West Wales general hospital, Carmarthen.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Education (Expenditure)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the figures, expressed in constant terms, for overall expenditure on education in Wales and for the number of school pupils for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available: and if he will express the expenditure figures as an amount per pupil in each year.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The education expenditure figures and school pupil numbers for the 10 years commencing with 1974-75 are as shown in the following Table. In expressing costs per school pupil, figures based on local authority current expeniture on schools have also been included.

(1) Financial Year	(2) Net education expenditure at 1983-84 prices (£ million)	(3) Net local authority current expenditure on schools at 1983-84 prices (£ million)	(4) School pupil numbers (at January each year) (thousands)	(5) Overall education expenditure expressed as cost per pupil in real terms £	(6) L.A. current schools expenditure expressed as cost per pupil in real terms £
1974-75	730·4	461·6	547·3	1,335	843
1975-76	741·3	476·2	552·8	1,321	861
1976-77	721·0	473·9	553·3	1,352	856
1977-78	663·6	455·2	549·9	1,207	828
1978-79	670·8	458·8	543·1	1,235	845
1979-80	648·2	448·5	533·4	1,215	841
1980-81	666·4	464·7	520·2	1,281	893
1981-82	661·3	468·6	506·9	1,305	924
1982-83	669·3	466·5	494·1	1,355	944
1983-84	673·0	470·0	485·6	1,386	968

Notes on the Figures

1. Overall expenditure figures are on the same basis as those shown in table 3.16 of the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428-II) and include net current and capital expenditure of the department and local authorities in Wales. They exclude expenditure outside our pogramme responsibilities namely on Universities and mandatory student awards.
2. Out-turn expenditure figures have been converted to real terms (1983-84 basis) by the applicaion of the GDP deflator.
3. School pupil numbers are the full time equivalents of pupils in nursery, primary and secondary schools as at January each year.

Road Schemes (Public Inquiries)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements his Department has for paying legal and other costs associated with public inquiries into new road schemes.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Arrangements for awarding costs in connection with public inquiries into road proposals are set out in Welsh Office circular 35/65 —a copy of which is in the Library.

Leasehold Reform Act 1967

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the Leasehold Reform Act 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. It is premature to consider any changes to the legislation until the Committee set up last year under Mr. Edward Nugee QC, which is looking at the problems arising from the management of privately owned blocks of flats, has reported.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the operation of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None in recent months.

Castlebeg Investments (Jersey) Ltd.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the activities of Castlebeg Ltd. in the purchase of freeholds in south Wales; what action he proposes in the light of these representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My Department has received two letters and some six telephone calls about Castlebeg Investments (Jersey) Limited. The issues involved are for the courts and in some cases, for the leasehold valuation tribunals to decide and I have no power to intervene. However, I am concerned about the alleged activities of this company and will be keeping a close watch on the situation.

Berwyn Consultation Zone

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales, on what basis the Berwyn consultation zone has been established by the Nature Conservancy Council; what area of land it is designed to protect; how many management agreements have to date been concluded; and over what area of land.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: I shall reply as soon as possible.

M4 (Design Life)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effects on the theoretical design life of more recently constructed sections of the M4 of the transference of heavy freight from rail to road being maintained after the coal strike for a period of (a) one year and (b) five years.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas [pursuant to his reply, of 15 March 1985, c. 312]: On the assumption that the additional traffic was to be maintained it is estimated that the theoretical design life of the more recently constructed sections of the M4 could be reduced by around 2 per cent. after one year and by around 10 per cent. after five years. In practice the actual condition of the motorway is continually monitored.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would have been the gross weekly income required on 1 November 1984, to maintain the real disposable income of a single person, taking account of payments of tax, national insurance, and 5 per cent. of earnings as superannuation contributions, who on 1 November 1974 earned (a) £20, (b) £25, (c) £30, (d) £35, (e) £40, (f) £45, (g) £50, (h) £60, (i) £70, (j) £80, (k) £90, (l) £100, (m) £125, (n) £150, (o) £175, (p) £200, (q) £225 and (r) £250, per week;

(2) what would have been the gross weekly income required on 1 November 1984, to maintain the real disposable income of a married man with two children under 11 years of age, taking account of payments of tax, national insurance, and 5 per cent. of earnings as superannuation contributions, who on 1 November 1974 earned (a) £20, (b) £25, (c) £30, (d) £35, (e) £40, (f) £45, (g) £50, (h) £60, (i) £70, (j) £80, (k) £90, (l) £100, (m) £125, (n) £150, (o) £175, (p) £200, (q) £225 and (r) £250, per week.

Mr. Moore: Information is given in the following table:

Company Taxation

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in real terms since 1978-79 in the amount of taxation paid by companies.

Mr. Moore: Including companies operating in the North Sea, an increase of about 100 per cent.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of tax payable by companies in respect of income derived from assets in the ownership of the company; and what is the rate of tax payable when such assets are transferred to the pension fund of the company.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

£1 Note

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the expected useful life of (i) an English £1 note and (ii) a Scottish £1 note.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The expected average useful life of an English £1 note is about 10 months. Scottish banknotes are not the responsibility of the Government, but of the note-issuing banks concerned. I have no reason to believe, however, that the useful life span of Scottish notes is significantly different from that of Bank of England notes.

Tax Offices (Staff)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list showing, by grades of staff, the tax office staffing complements allocated to Inland Revenue south-west region since April 1981, identifying the date of each change and the reasons for each change.

Mr. Moore: The complements allocated since April 1981 are as follows. Changes in complement (increases as well as decreases) have arisen for a variety of reasons including legislative changes, tranfers of blocks of work between regions, management measures leading to more efficient procedures and movements in taxpayer populations. A comprehensive reconciliation of all these changes could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list showing, by grades of staff, the staffing complements allocated to tax offices in Yeovil since April 1981, identifying the date of each change and the reasons for each change.

Mr. Moore: The complements issued to tax offices in Yeovil since April 1981 are as follows. Changes in local office complements reflect changes in the regional complement and variations in local circumstances. A comprehensive reconciliation of the marginal changes (increases as well as decreases) since 1 April 1981 could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Hot Take Away Food

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the take-away food trade regarding the definition of hot take-away food for the purposes of the operation of the Finance Act 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations and most have concerned the scope of the definition; but it has also been claimed that the definition is insufficiently precise, particularly as regards freshly baked products.

Minimum Income Level

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the number of P11D forms concerning benefits in kind which would be submitted, (b) the loss of revenue and (c) the administrative costs saving in a full financial year if the minimum income level were raised to £9,500, £10,500, £11,500, £12,500, £13,000 and £14,500 per annum respectively.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Average Income

Mr. Butterfill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average income from all sources of all individuals aged 16 years or over, whether or not they are in employment or otherwise economically active, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Moore: Estimates of the average income from all sources of all individuals aged 16 years and over are not available. Estimates of total household income, which include the income of persons under 16, are, however, published in table 4.4 of the United Kingdom National Accounts. A rough guide to average income can be obtained by dividing these aggregates by the total population aged 16 and over. For 1983, the latest year for which figures are available, average income calculated in this way was about £5,300 before tax, and about £4,200 after deducting tax and national insurance and occupational pension contributions.

Business Expansion Scheme

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the costs of the business expansion scheme in 1983-84 and 1984-85, as a whole, and the costs of the subsidies for that part of the business expansion scheme relating to property development in 1983-84 and 1984-85;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of applications for tax relief under the business expansion scheme for schemes relating to property development in 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Moore: Information about the business expansion scheme in 1983-84 is not yet complete, but the estimates published in the "Treasury Economic Progress Report", December 1984, indicated that at least £75 million was invested in over 300 companies. Of these, eight were property development companies who received a total of just over £1 million of investment. The direct revenue costs of tax relief are approximately 50 per cent. of the amounts invested. It is too early to provide estimates in respect of 1984-85.

Building Industry (VAT)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Building Employers Confederation concerning the implications of the value added tax registration threshold for the administrative efficiency of the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Building Employers Confederation and other industry bodies have asked for the registration threshold to be reduced to nil for any person supplying building services.

I refer my hon. Friend to my speech in the Adjournment debate on Friday 25 January 1985, at columns 1307-12.

Lorries (Fuel Oil Checks)

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which branch of Customs and Excise is responsible for stopping and checking whether lorries are running on red or white fuel oil.

Mr. Hayhoe: The checking of fuel in the tanks of lorries is carried out by mobile testing units controlled by the Revenue Duties Directorate of Customs and Excise.

Occupational Pension Trusts

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the yield of tax that would be obtained if the funds held by occupational trusts as reserves and not allocated as the entitlement of individual beneficiaries were taxed at the same rate as the income drawn by companies from assets in the ownership of the company.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total value of the funds invested in the occupational pension trusts approved for tax purposes for beneficiaries in private sector employment; and what is the proportion which can be identified as having been allocated to particular beneficiaries.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Export Bank (Report)

Mr. Dover asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he anticipates that the working party examining the need for an export bank is likely to produce its findings.

Mr. Peter Rees: Discussions on the possible role for a private sector export bank are being actively pursued with a wide range of interested parties, including both users and providers of export finance. It is not possible to forecast as yet when these discussions will be completed.

Post-tax Profits

Mr. McKelvey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the post-tax profits of the following sectors expressed as a percentage of gross national product in 1970, 1975, 1980 and the latest available date (a) manufacturing industry, (b) financial institutions and (c) oil companies.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Investment Income (Taxation)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters and representations he has received on the taxation of a married woman's investment income.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Privatisation (Profits)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why Her Majesty's Treasury presents the profits from privatisation and the sale of council houses as negative spending rather than asset sales.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 59]: Receipts from privatisation and the sale of council houses are classified as asset sales. Receipts from asset sales, have always been treated as negative public expenditure in the national accounts and there is no reason to treat sales of council houses or shares differently from other sales of public assets. This treatment, which accords with international guidelines, is also followed in the definition of the public expenditure planning total. Major central Government asset sales are brought together in the special sales of assets programme (see Cmnd. 9428, table 2.14) for easy identification. Council house sales are undertaken by local authorities and are included in the housing programme (see Cmnd. 9428, table 3.7).

£ Sterling

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect a change in the exchange rate between the £ sterling and the European currency unit has on financial transactions between the United Kingdom and the EEC.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 61]: The effect of exchange rate fluctuations on EC financial transactions is complex. VAT payments are initially established in ecu. A fall in the value of sterling relative to the ecu after the exchange rates used for budgetary transactions have been set results in additional sterling payments being required during the budgetary year to make up the required ecu payment. However, the definitivee VAT obligation is assessed on the basis of the value of the United Kingdom VAT base in sterling terms, so all other things being equal the United Kingdom could expect to receive a refund the following August of any over-payments made in the preceding budgetary year.

Agricultural levies are set in ecu terms. The sterling receipts received and paid over to the Community therefore vary with the exchange rate. Customs duties are normally expressed in percentage terms of the sterling value of the import.

Receipts from the Community budget which are expressed as a percentage of United Kingdom expenditure are paid in sterling. However, at the commitment stage the Commission makes budgetary provision in ecus; changes in the exchange rates between the date of commitment and the date of payment therefore affect the size of the sterling payment. The major payment denominated in ecu terms in recent years has been the agreed United Kingdom refunds. The amount of sterling received has depended on the exchange rate on the date that payment of the refund was authorised.

While agricultural receipts are denominated in sterling terms the levels of price support are determined by sterling's "green rate" against the ecu. If the green rate diverges significantly from the market rate both agricultural receipts and levy payments are affected. The position is further complicated by the imposition of positive or negative Monetary Compensatory Amounts.

These effects are difficult to quantify, and, as in the case of green rates for agricultural expenditure, may affect some sectors more than others. But over the long run there is no reason why exchange rate changes should have a particularly distorting effect upon financial transactions with the European Community as opposed to other parts of the world.

EC Budget

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1972 (a) net payments to the European Community budget excluding overseas aid, (b) receipts from the agricultural guarantee and guidance fund, (c) receipts from the social fund and (d) receipts from the regional development funds.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985; c. 61]: The information available is set out in the table. The United Kingdom did not start to pay contributions to the Community Budget until 1973; the final outturn figures for 1984 are not yet available. Details of the United Kingdom's attributed share of overseas aid contributions are not available by calendar year and the net contributions figures given in the table therefore include this expenditure.

EC (Contributions and Receipts)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount paid to the European Economic Community and the total amount received in grant since the beginning of the financial year.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 259]: Established figures for the amount received in grant during the 1984-85 financial year are currently available only for the period ending 31 December. For the period 1 April to 31 December 1984 the figures for payments and receipts, including our refunds from the Community, were £2,494 million and £1,831 million respectively.

EC (Advance Payments)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why he has presented two separate supplementary estimates, for £99 million and £265 million, respectively, for advance payments to the Common Market; and on what basis they have been calculated as representing one month's payment of European Economic Community own-resources other than value added tax own-resources.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 259]: There is only one Spring supplementary estimate for the Budget of the European Communities. It was first presented to Parliament on 14 February (HC 183 of 1984-85) and later revised to take account of new information and new decisions. The revised Supplementary Estimate for £364 million was then presented on 28 February (HC 227 of 1984-85). This allows for 3 payments to the Community in the final quarter of the 1984-85 financial year of non-VAT own resources to be made in the month after collection, rather than two months after collection. These payments do not involve any net addition to public expenditure. Details were given in the Financial Secretary's note also presented to Parliament on 28 February.

The estimates of these payments are based on the provisional accounts of Customs and Excise and the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce. They represent a non-audited statement of the amount recorded in the Department's accounts for the monies collected and deferred for customs duties and agricultural and sugar and isoglucose levies for the months in question.

CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. Montague Alfred

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether Mr. Montague Alfred is currently in the employ of the state.

Mr. Hayhoe: The appointment of Mr. Montague Alfred as Chief Executive of the Property Services Agency ended on 12 March 1984. He is not currently employed in the Civil Service.

ENERGY

Energy Prices

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average domestic price per comparable unit of (a) gas, (b) electricity and (c) domestic fuel oil in (i) May 1979 and (ii) May 1984, in the following countries: the United Kingdom, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Italy, the United States of America and Canada.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Comparable information for May 1979 and May 1984 is not readily available for the countries specified. The available data for the second quarters of 1979 and 1984 are shown in the table:

	Average revenue from sales of gas to households in pence per therm		Average revenue from sales of electricity to households in pence per kWh		Average price of light heating oil to households in pence per litre

Notes:
(i) Except for gas prices in the Netherlands (which relate to an annual consumption of 3000 cu. meters) the prices shown above for gas and electricity are based on average revenue per unit consumed. In general this will differ from the price derived for a given level of annual consumption.
(ii) International comparisons of energy prices are difficult to construct because of incompatibilities in the basic data. They require careful interpretation because of movements in exchange rates and variation in the timing of tariff revisions between countries. The above figures are based on exchange rates prevailing in the second quarters of 1979 and 1984 respectively: had they all been based on 1984 rates a different picture would have been shown.

Coal Mining Industry (Dismissals)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to how many employees have been dismissed by the National Coal Board in the last four weeks; and, of these, how many have not been convicted in the courts.

Mr. David Hunt: The dismissal of employees is a matter for the National Coal Board.

Coal Industry Dispute (Convictions)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the basis for his statement on Radio Scotland on Tuesday 12 March that 900 miners have been convicted in courts for offences arising out of the miners' strike in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information was obtained from the National Coal Board, which subsequently informed me that the figures that it had given related to the number of persons against whom proceedings had been instituted rather than the number of convictions. I am pleased to say that this mistake in its advice was quickly spotted by the NCB, and the correct figure for the number of convictions in Scotland relating to the coal dispute was given to the House last week. As at 6 March, proceedings have been instituted against 1046 persons, and 583 persons have been convicted. Around 251 cases have not yet been completed.

I wrote last week to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) and confirmed the correct figures to him.

SCOTLAND

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average charge made for admission to visit ancient monuments in Scotland; what income is derived by these charges; what is the cost of looking after these ancient monuments; and how much subsidy is paid.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows for the finacial year 1984-85. It does not include certain other items of income and expenditure related to the monuments, eg preparation and sales of publications etc. No specific allocation of funds is made in the form of a subsidy.

Average adult admission price for the 73 monuments for which a charge is made	0·48
Estimated income from admissions	1,530,000
Estimated expenditure on all ancient monuments in the care of the Secretary of State for Scotland (includes £4,800,000 estimated staff costs and associated overheads)	8,270,000

Departmental Managers (Accounting)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what accounting developments are being made in his Department to give line managers better information about the cost and condition of the capital assets they are managing.

Mr. Younger: As part of its programme of financial management improvements my Department has introduced a financial information and control system for the Scottish Office other than the prison service which provides line managers with detailed analyses of costs, including the costs of using capital assets.

For the prison service a separate but similar management accounting system is in being, and in addition a physical condition survey of the prisons estate is nearing completion: this will provide comprehensive data on the condition of all buildings and associated services.

Wyndford Recreation Centre

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when Glasgow district council will be notified of approval of the urban aid application in respect of the Wyndford recreation centre about which the Minister wrote to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill on 21 January.

Mr. Ancram: The council was informed by the Scottish Development Department in early February of my decision to approve the additional post of project supervisor for the centre. This was confirmed in a letter issued on 14 March formally revising the offer issued on 12 October 1983.

Woodlands (Conversion)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is the policy of the Forestry Commission to presume against the conversion of woodlands to agriculture; and what are the conditions which have to be satisfied before such conversion is approved by the commission.

Mr. John MacKay: There is a general presumption against the conversion of woodlands to agricultural and other uses. In considering whether to override this presumption in any particular case, the Forestry Commission takes into account such factors as the Agricultural Department's assessment of the contribution that the proposed conversion would make to the viability and economy of the remainder of the agricultural holding, the views of any other authorities consulted, such as the local authority, and the commission's own assessment of the silvicultural and environmental aspects.

"Broadleaves in Britain"

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why the meetings between the Forestry Commission and Nature Conservancy Council to discuss the revision of the "Broadleaves in Britain" review are kept confidential at the commission's request.

Mr. John MacKay: Ideas are still being developed and it would be premature to open them up at this stage to general debate. Draft proposals will be discussed at the Forestry Commission's seminar on broadleaved woodland policy to be held on 8 May.

Area Health Boards

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the membership of the area health boards in Scotland, indicating for each board the names of members who were not reappointed in the recent appointments, together with the names and nominating organisations of the new members appointed to replace them.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Butter

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to introduce a rationing system for the sale in the United Kingdom of butter under the European Economic Community reduced price butter scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission regulation which authorises the special butter sale requires that member states take measures to ensure as far as possible a balanced distribution of the butter made available under the scheme. To this end we have allocated the butter to suppliers of butter to the packet market on the basis of their past sales and have required that they endeavour to ensure that it is distributed to the wholesalers and retailers broadly on the basis of past trade. We do not intend to introduce a system of rationing at retail level. There is, however, nothing to prevent individual retailers from taking steps to ensure any particular distribution of the butter amongst their customers but this is a matter for retailers to decide.

Pesticides

Mr. Forman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to require the amounts of pesticide used on farms to be included in the June census return.

Mrs. Fenner: Part III of the Food and Environment Protection Bill would provide Ministers with power to require information from users of a pesticide.

Ministers believe that in certain circumstances the benefits in environmental safety may justify the additional burden of keeping records to furnish such information. The Department will be consulting all interested parties later in the year on the appropriate use of this power.

Mr. Forman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received advocating limits on the total amount of pesticide active ingredient and the number of spray applications that may be applied to any one unit in any one season under the Food and Environment Protection Bill [Lords].

Mrs. Fenner: I have received representations from both farming and environmental interests advocating such limits.

Mr. Forman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to review the efficacy and safety of the pesticide Metasystox.

Mrs. Fenner: The safety position of all pesticides is kept under continuous review. Similarly the efficacy of pesticides approved under the agricultural chemicals approvals scheme, as are Metasystox 55 and Metasystox R, is also kept under review.

Aspartame

Mr. Dykes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the current per capita consumption of the intense sweetener Aspartame in all forms of food and drink; and how this figure compares with the consumption estimated by the food additives and contaminants committee in 1982.

Mrs. Fenner: No estimate of present per capita consumption of Aspartame is available. It is used largely for low calorie soft drinks and sweetening tablets. As I explained to my hon. Friend in my reply to him on 23 January 1985, information on the intake of all permitted sweeteners will be collected and reviewed within the next four years.

Foodstuffs

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the current levels of export rebate and import levy, respectively, for each category of foodstuff; and if he will publish a separate table showing, where applicable, the current intervention prices for the same foodstuffs, in pound sterling terms in all cases.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the following tables.

Import levies and export refunds applicable in the United Kingdom on 15 March 1985

* The rates of levy and export refund vary for different tariff headings. The rates quoted are: beef and veal—carcase; pigmeat—carcase; poultrymeat—70 per cent. chickens; rice—wholly milled long grain; olive oil—virgin lampante; eggs in shell.

Levies and export refunds are shown after deduction of the monetary compensatory amounts where applicable.

† In practice the United Kingdom's imports from third countries are normally covered by the Lomé convention and enter the Community levy-free.

‡ A special lower rate of levy is applicable to imports of butter from New Zealand.

‖ Most imports of beef from third countries are subject to special arrangements allowing entry at reduced levy rates.

¶ Imports of lamb under voluntary restraint arrangements with principal suppliers and related agreements are subject to a reduced charge of 10 per cent. ad valorem. Any imports outside these arrangements are subject to levies which cannot exceed 20 per cent. tariff bound in the GATT.

• Maximum rate of export refunds fixed under the tenders accepted on 14 March (cereals) and 13 March (sugar) for specified volumes.

■ Export refunds vary greatly according to the category of animal, type of meat etc. The figure quoted is for CCT code 0201AIIal (carcases).

‡ Intervention price liveweight. Following the introduction of the carcase classification grid in April 1984, intervention is available on a range of carcase categories at different specified buying-in prices. It is also only available on certain cuts at different times of the year; on 15 March it was available only on hindquarters.

‖ Intervention buying for specified grades may take place between 78 per cent. and 92 per cent. of the basic price which is currently £1,258/tonne. No intervention has taken place in the United Kingdom.

Cormorants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of cormorants in England; and if their numbers are declining.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

The last survey of the cormorant population took place in 1969-70, when it was estimated that the total number of breeding pairs in England was 1,116. There is no firm evidence available at the moment to indicate any change in this level. I understand, however, that the British Trust for Ornithology is currently undertaking a pilot study in preparation for a major survey next year. It is hoped that this may be able to provide reliable information on current population levels.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mechanical Engineering Products

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what were the annual figures for total United Kingdom imports by value for each of the mechanical engineering economic development council sectors, in each of the years 1970 to 1984, inclusive, on an overseas trade statistics basis;

(2) what were the annual figures for total United Kingdom exports by value for each of the mechanical and engineering economic development council sectors in each of the years 1970 to 1984, inclusive, on an overseas trade statistics basis.

Mr. Channon: Import and export information on the basis of the precise product coverage of each economic development committee (EDC) could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The following information represents an approximation to the coverage of eight EDCs for mechanical engineering industries. Information on this basis is not available for the years prior to 1978 or for the EDCs for diesel engines, engineering construction, and mechanical handling.

DEFENCE

Mr. J. J. Engelbrecht

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a South African national, Mr. J. J. Engelbrecht has undertaken research at the Royal Radar Establishment, Malvern, since 1979.

Mr. Lee: No.

NATO (West German Border)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to the construction in peacetime of a physical barrier along the West German border with eastern Europe which would be impenetrable by tank assault.

Mr. Stanley: This possibility has not been given detailed consideration in recent times within NATO mainly because it would be intrusive, extremely expensive and, with the conventional and nuclear weapons available to the Warsaw Pact, it would not be impenetrable.

Operation Lionheart

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the full cost to Britain of Operation Lionheart; and when he proposes to deposit the final report on the exercise in the Library.

Mr. Stanley: Final cost figures are not yet available. Our latest estimate of the total cost to the United Kingdom is about £31 million, part of which would have been incurred in any event. Up-to-date figures will be included in the final report on the exercise, which should be available in the autumn. I shall place a copy in the Library.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide information concerning the attendance of British military attachés at South African military exercises for the years 1979 to 1985 inclusive and give the name of the exercise, the date of the exercise, the venue of the exercise and the names of military attachés attending for each exercise.

Mr. Stanley: British military attachés have attended only one South African military exercise during the period 1979 to 1985 inclusive. This was Exercise Thunder Chariot, held in September 1984 at Lohatla in northern Cape Province. The British defence attaché (Colonel D. W. Hanson, OBE) and the naval air attaché (Group Captain G. L. Gridley, OBE, RAF) attended for one day only, along with attachés from other countries, as observers.

Type 23 Frigates

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the third type 23 order will be put out to full competitive tender and that the results of that exercise will be the principal factor determining the award of that order.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Line Managers (Capital Assets)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what accounting developments are being made in his Department to give line managers better information about the cost and condition of the capital assets they are managing.

Mr. Butler: The Department has an extensive system of management accounts which cover some 70 per cent. of the defence budget, excluding procurement. These accounts include, besides running costs, the capital-related costs of activities. The condition of capital assets such as military equipment, plant and buildings is regularly monitored. Starting on 1 April next we are introducing a new system of executive responsibility budgets on an extensive scale within the support field. These arrangements, which are primarily aimed at promoting greater efficiency and economy, will help to encourage more extensive use of fixed asset registers and records of asset utilisation for management purposes. Managers will have an incentive to identify assets which can be better utilised or alternatively released for disposal.

Home Service Force

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to expand the Home Service Force.

Mr. Lee: We are currently proceeding with plans to expand the Home Service Force to a strength of 5,000, announced to the House on 25 July 1984. We shall in due course consider the scope for further expansion of the Home Service Force in the longer term.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 21 December 1984, at column 375.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence where exercise Brave Defender will take place.

Mr. Stanley: The exercise will take place at a variety of locations throughout Great Britain. Most exercise activity will take place on MOD property, although some use may be made of private land.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number, and specify the locations, of damage control centres which will be established to assess the compensation claims from the public arising out of operation Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: It is not anticipated that the exercise will cause significant damage to private property. Any claims for compensation which do arise will be considered by the Ministry of Defence in the normal manner.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what roles the following groups will play in exercise Brave Defender; the 5th Infantry Brigade, the 5th Airborne Brigade, the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve and the Home Service Force.

Mr. Stanley: The forces referred to will exercise their home defence roles for the protection of vital installations in the UK.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence which key points are to be defended as part of exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: A representative selection of installations will be chosen as key points for exercise purposes. A final list has yet to be drawn up. The installations used in the exercise will not necessarily be actual key points, information about which is classified.

Civilian Pay Records Office, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future of the civilian pay records office in Portsmouth; if he will give an indication of the future job prospects for the 120 employees who work there; what are the Government's intended actions with regard to the recommendations contained in Coopers and Lybrand's internal audit of the Department of Directors General accounts; and if the Government have any long term proposals for the privatisation of activities and work carried out at the civilian pay records office in Portsmouth.

Mr. Butler: The plans announced in 1982 to centralise at CPRO Portsmouth the calculation of pay for MOD industrials employed in southern England continue. The transfer of work to Portsmouth should be completed by 1987. During this period the number of staff employed in the CPRO will increase.

The Secretary of State for Defence has recently approved a number of further studies following the efficiency audit of the defence accounts organisation carried out last year by Coopers and Lybrand Associates.

One of these will be to examine the MOD pay systems to determine the feasibility of introducing more efficient procedures.

The Government have no proposals for the privatisation of activities and work carried out at the CPRO in Portsmouth.

Royal Artillery Guided Weapons Range, Hebrides

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of missile currently fired from or over the Royal Artillery guided weapons range, Hebrides; and if there are any plans in existence to introduce new missiles to the range.

Mr. Lee: The following weapons were fired at the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides during 1984: Rapier, Blowpipe, Javelin, Lance (inert telemetry warhead), Sub Harpoon, Sea Eagle, Sea Dart and Sky Flash. Other missiles, as they come into service, may be fired at the range in future.

Practice Bombing Runs

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish figures to show the number of practice bombing runs carried out in each year since 1981 at the air-to-ground weapons ranges at Rosehearty, Tain and Cape Wrath; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into Royal Air Force, United States Air Force, other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation air forces and non-North Atlantic Treaty Organisation air forces.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

NATO Fuel Stocks

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the fuel stocks held in storage at North Atlantic Treaty Organisation petroleum, oil and lubricants depots in Scotland is United States of America national war reserve stock.

Mr. Lee: This information is classified.

Royal Marine Units (Home Defence)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list any Royal Marines units which are allocated to a home defence role.

Mr. Lee: No Royal Marines units are entirely dedicated to a home defence role but elements of Commando training centre Royal Marines, Royal Marines Poole, Royal Marines Deal, Comacchio Group Royal Marines, and other minor units, augmented by reserves, would be allocated to this task.

US Marine Corps (Materials and Supplies)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for the pre-positioning of military material and supplies for the United States Marine Corps in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

British Underwater Test and Evaluation Centre

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if plans exist for any expansion of (a) shore facilities and (b) sea area of the British underwater test and evaluation centre at Kyle of Lochalsh.

Mr. Lee: There is a requirement for additional storage facilities and a slipway at the shore site of the British underwater test and evaluation centre, and consideration is being given to acquiring a small site immediately adjacent to the existing shore facility. In assessing the adequacy of the BUTEC facility to its role of supporting the Navy's torpedo procurement programme, the possibility of the need arising for additional shore facilities at some stage in the future can never be ruled out. An outer border between ½ and 1 mile will be added to the existing sea area in which certain types of fishing will be prohibited, and this will be covered by the byelaws which come into effect on 25 March. The range itself is not being extended, nor are there any plans to do so. I refer the right hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend, the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces' letter to him of 3 January 1984 which detailed the reasons for the introduction of an outer border.

United States Navy Mobile Mine Assembly Group

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the United States navy mobile mine assembly group detachments at Glen Douglas and Machrihanish.

Mr. Lee: To maintain and assemble conventional mines for NATO use.

Airfields (Emergency Wartime Use)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence which airfields in the United Kingdom have been designated for emergency wartime use by aircraft from United States Navy aircraft carriers.

Mr. Stanley: Such details of wartime reinforcement planning are classified.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what checks are made by his Department over the periodic discharge of radioactive waste at sea by United States Navy submarine depot ships based at the Holy Loch.

Mr. Stanley: No such checks are made. However, I understand that the discharges at sea by the USN depot ship the USS Hunley are of low level radioactive water, take place more than 12 miles from the shore and are strictly controlled.

United States Air Force and Navy Hospitals

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether British or United States Services are responsible for security at United States air force and navy hospitals in the United Kingdom in wartime.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

United States Military Hospitals

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any United States National Guards units are earmarked to provide security at United States military hospitals in Britain in wartime.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

United States National Guard (Exercises)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any medical units of the United States National Guard have been exercised at any United States military hospitals in Britain.

Mr. Lee: No.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the commercial firms approached by Mr. Peter Levene about their possible interest in an agency management scheme for the royal dockyards are foreign-owned.

Mr. Lee: The companies approached by Mr. Levene were all established firms in the United Kingdom. Some of them, however, as large and successful companies, have international links. The Government accept the need for appropriate safeguards against foreign control should proposals involving commercial management of the royal dockyards be developed.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to his Department of distributing information and material on private health insurance to his Department's employees.

Mr. Butler: Information was last distributed in 1983 using the Department's existing distribution organisation. It is not possible separately to identify the cost. At one Ministry of Defence establishment a small amount of overtime was wrongly incurred in organising internal distribution. The cost amounted to approximately £100.

RAF Molesworth

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence why permission has been refused for the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament to use fields surrounding RAF Molesworth for the forthcoming Easter demonstration.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report (i) for each county council and (ii) for each district council in England and Wales (a) the total payments made in rate support grant for the year 1974-75, (b) an estimate of the payments shown in (a) above at present day prices and (c) the total payments made in rate support grant for the year 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is given in the following table. The figures in columns 2 and 3 are not comparable, for the following reasons:

(i) Rate support grant in 1974-75 comprised needs, resources and domestic elements. Needs element was paid to non-metropolitan county councils, metropolitan district councils and London borough councils. Resources element was paid to qualifying non-metropolitan district councils, metropolitan district councils and London borough councils. No payments were made to precepting authorities in London or to the metropolitan county councils.

(ii) The figures for 1984-85 comprise block grant, after holdback, and domestic rate relief grant. Block grant is payable to all local authorities.

Receipts and payments under the appropriate London rate equalisation scheme are not included.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has been responsible for payments of rate support grant to local authorities in Wales since 1981-82.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been conducted into the effects of SO_2 and NO_x emissions on ancient monuments; and for how long the Central Electricity Generating Board has been involved in such research.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Building Research Establishment and Imperial college, London have been carrying out joint research for several years into the deterioration of the fabric of buildings of notable historic importance, specifically St. Paul's and Wells cathedrals. Damage to stone in regions with higher pollution levels is also being monitored; Bolsover abbey has been selected for this purpose. My Department has recently set up a group of experts to review the impact of acid deposition on building and construction materials, including historic buildings and cultural monuments; the CEGB is represented in this group. I understand that the CEGB and the Cathedrals Advisory Commission recently announced a collaborative investigation into the nature and causes of the corrosion of the stonework of ancient buildings through air pollution.

Wild Birds (Conservation)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the text of the reasoned opinion delivered by the European Commission concerning the alleged failure of the United Kingdom to incorporate correctly the Council directive of 2 April 1979 on the conservation of wild birds (79/409) as notified in the Bulletin of the European Communities No. 10 1984 page 89; and if he will publish his response to this reasoned opinion.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: On 23 February 1984 the European Commission questioned British compliance with the provisions of the directive. It raised three points. The Government were able to satisfy them on two of these. The third related to Northern Ireland. Orders in Council to implement the directive in Northern Ireland were laid before Parliament on 22 November 1984, and approved by the House of Commons on 16 January 1985, the House of Lords on 17 February 1985, and the Privy Council on 14 February 1985. They will become effective on 14 April 1985.

I have placed in the Library a copy of the reasoned opinion forwarded to Her Majesty's Government on 16 October 1984.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many waste disposal facilities in the United Kingdom are licensed by his Department to handle radioactive waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are 26 sites in England which are permitted to receive low-level radioactive waste for controlled burial as a result of authorisations issued by my Department under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. My Department is not responsible for authorising disposals elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much low-level radioactive waste is disposed of each year at United Kingdom sites other than Drigg in Cumbria.

Mr. Waldegrave: Authorisations issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 require persons disposing of radioactive waste to keep records of the amounts disposed of. In the case of low-level solid wastes this information is not brought together centrally, and it would be disproportionately expensive to collect.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how radioactive wastes arising from the commercial operations of Amersham International are disposed of; and in what quantities.

Mr. Waldegrave: The routes by which Amersham International plc is permitted to dispose of radioactive wastes, and information about the quantities disposed of, are given in additional tables on radioactivity of the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics (No. 6 1983), copies of which are in the Library. These cover the period 1977 to 1982 inclusive. Digest No. 7, covering 1983, will be published shortly and I shall arrange for copies to be similarly available.

Holiday Projects

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number and total value of holiday projects approved under traditional urban programme circular 25; and what type of schemes were supported.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: One hundred and sixty-two projects worth £400,000 have been approved sponsored by 79 local authorities which have extensively deprived urban areas but do not qualify for partnership or programme status. Many of the projects are block approvals covering a number of small schemes. A wide range of activities will be supported including play schemes, adventure holidays, drama, dance and music projects, special sports activities, educational trips and visits and special language classes. As usual priority has been given to schemes run by voluntary groups and those which help handicapped children and disadvantaged ethnic minority groups. These holiday projects are additional to the round-the-year support given under the traditional urban programme to projects for children.

Vehicle Exhaust Emission Control

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the European Commission's recent proposals for vehicle exhaust emission control.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government are keen to see vehicle emissions reduced as far as possible, having due regard for costs, and we are taking a positive approach in Community negotiations.

Alternative technologies, including the lean-burn engine, now being developed promise far greater fuel efficiency and robustness than the three-way catalyst technology used in the USA and favoured by some in Europe. These alternative technologies give almost the same reductions in emissions on a new car at less than half the cost of the three-way catalyst; over the whole life of a car they offer the prospect of better reductions, together with improved economy. Because of these implications for Community resources, the Government consider that new limit values should both afford significant environmental improvements and also enable the development of the alternative technologies to continue. The Council of Environment Ministers considered this issue on 7 March, and will return to it on 20 March, when I very much hope that it will be possible to reach agreement.

Social Services Authorities

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which social services authorities are in penalty in 1985-86.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not possible to tell until budgeted expenditure returns have been received from all local authorities.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available on the level of rent arrears over the last five years.

Sir George Young: Local authority rent arrears in England and Wales for the five years ending on 31 March 1984 amounted to:

	Gross collectable rent	Gross rent arrears	Arrears as a percentage of collectable rent
	£ thousand	£ thousand	Percentage
31 March 1980	1,944,506	73,707	3·8
31 March 1981	2,266,718	99,779	4·4
31 March 1982	3,135,744	138,667	4·4
31 March 1983	3,544,153	176,428	5·0
31 March 1984	3,485,388	187,931	5·4

Information about rent arrears owed to housing associations and to private sector landlords is not available.

Council House Sales

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of sales completed under the right to buy or voluntary procedures for each year since 1979 to the latest available date by (a) the Lichfield district council, (b) the Cannock Chase district council and (c) the Stafford borough council.

Sir George Young: The authorities reported the following numbers of sales:

Dwellings sold: Right to buy and voluntary

	Cannock Chase	Lichfield	Stafford
1979-80	0	n/a	70
1980-81	0	35	246
1981-82	201	115	221
1982-83	957	*107	327
1983-84	362	n/a	226
April-December 1984	116	125	149

* April to December 1982 only.
n/a = not available.

Royal Docks (Enterprise Zone)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to declare royal docks an enterprise zone.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend does not intend to designate any further enterprise zones at present.

"Mortgage Repayment Difficulties"

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the Building Societies Association report, "Mortgage Repayment Difficulties," a copy of which has been sent to him, in so far as they relate to his responsibilities.

Mr. Gow: The report from the Building Societies Association puts the issue of mortgage repayment difficulties into proportion. It shows that over 99 per cent. of building societies' borrowers are able to maintain their mortgage payments, and that the single most important cause of arrears is matrimonial problems. For those who are in difficulties, the report suggests how societies can help. I am grateful to the association for publishing its findings.

Extremely Low Frequency Communications

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will commission a study into the effects of extremely low frequency communications on the environment.

Mr Waldegrave: I have no present plans to do so. I understand that extensive research in the United States has indicated no cause for concern about environmental effects of this type of communication system. My Department will keep the subject under review.

Old Weston Road, Molesworth

Mr. Weetch asked the the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any proposals to extinguish the public right of way along Old Weston road, near Molesworth.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985]: My right hon. Friend has received no such proposals. I understand that Cambridgeshire county council has decided to stop up a lay-by on Old Weston road and its application is currently before the magistrates court.

EMPLOYMENT

Shell Refinery, Stanlow

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, in the light of the announced loss of 1,000 jobs at the Shell refinery at Stanlow, he has any plans to introduce special measures to alleviate the present level of unemployment in the area.

Mr. Alan Clark: I was of course concerned to hear of the proposed manpower reductions at Shell's Stanlow refinery. I understand that Shell hopes this can be achieved by means of voluntary redundancies and natural wastage over a two-year period. All the facilities of the Manpower Services Commission will be made available to help those made redundant find alternative employment or train for new jobs. Local jobcentre and training officials have already contacted the company to offer their assistance.

It is in recognition of its particular problems that the Wirral and Chester travel-to-work area has been designated a development area and is thus eligible for assistance at the highest level. However, the only way to achieve a substantial impact on unemployment in Ellesmere Port and elsewhere is for the Government to maintain their economic policies while encouraging greater enterprise, flexibility and competitiveness in industry and the labour market. In the meantime, the area continues to benefit from our special employment and training measures which are doing much to alleviate the worst effects of unemployment.

Under-age Juveniles

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received, citing individual cases, in response to the issues raised by the report of the low pay unit about the employment of under-age juveniles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. I have nothing to add at present to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 1 February 1985 at column 329.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many miners dismissed by the National Coal Board have been refused unemployment benefit since 5 March.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not readily available and be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria his regional adjudicators use to assess reports from pit managers that the industrial dispute is over and a pit has returned to normal working before awarding unemployment benefit; and how he intends to ensure consistency in pit managers' recommendations of what constitutes normal working.

Mr. Alan Clark: Regional adjudication officers hold independent appointments under social security law and Ministers are precluded from intervening in the adjudication process. I understand, however, that the chief adjudication officer has recently issued guidance aimed at ensuring consistency in the treatment by adjudication officers of information received from pit managers.

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment why the onus of proving normal working after a trade dispute rests with the claimant of unemployment benefit; and what access to records the claimant has to ascertain this.

Mr. Alan Clark: Social security—formerly national insurance — commissioners' reported decisions which form precedent case law place this onus on the claimant. Copies of decisions are available in the Library and can be seen by claimants at local offices of the Department of Health and Social Security.

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what account his adjudicating officers take, when assessing eligibility for unemployment benefit for dismissed striking miners, of the existence of an overtime ban when assessing whether a pit is to be classified as working normally.

Mr. Alan Clark: Adjudication officers hold independent appointments under social security law and consequently I cannot comment on or intervene in the adjudication process.

WALES

Government Expenditure

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report table 3.16 of the Government expenditure plans 1985-86 to 1987-88 expressed in real terms.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The following table shows the figures which appeared in table 3.16 of the Government's expenditure plans 1985-86 to 1987-88, adjusted to 1983-84 price levels by means of the relevant gross domestic product deflators.

Public expenditure—Wales

In some cases the individual figures do not add exactly to the totals shown because both the individual figures and the totals have been derived from unrounded figures.

Berwyn Consultation Zone

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what basis the Berwyn consultation zone has been established by the Nature Conservancy Council; what area of land it is designed to protect; how many management agreements have to date been concluded; and over what area of land.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas [pursuant to his reply, 18 March, c. 390]: The Berwyn consultation zone was established on a voluntary basis between the Nature Conservancy Council and the Berwyn Society. It covers an area of 4,887 hectares. No management agreements have been concluded to date.

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Signs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport why all the billboards on the M1 advertising Radio Hallam are on the south-bound carriageway while all those advertising Radio Sheffield are on the north-bound carriageway.

Mrs. Chalker: It was agreed with the broadcasting authorities that to sign the BBC1 local radio station in one direction and the IBA station in the other was the fairest and most convenient arrangement. To sign both stations in the same direction would have been confusing to drivers.

M20

Mr. Crouch asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the M20 to Dover will be completed.

Mrs. Chalker: I hope to start construction of the Maidstone-Ashford section of the M20 in 1987. This should enable us to complete the motorway to Folkestone in 1989.

There is a scheme for the improvement of the A20 between Folkestone and Dover in our main programme for April 1987 onwards. The date of completion will depend on the progress of the statutory procedures.

Heathrow-Gatwick (Helicopter Link)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the time saving involved, he will make it his policy to maintain a helicopter link between Heathrow and Gatwick airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State directed the Civil Aviation Authority last year on environmental grounds to terminate the licence for the Heathrow-Gatwick helicopter service shortly after the opening of the Wisley-Reigate section of the M25.

Car Parks

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to require owners and operators of car parks to accept responsibility for loss or damage to vehicles therein; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No; this would not be appropriate.

Motorway Mileage

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total mileage of motorways in Cumbria, Lancashire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester and Cheshire.

Mr. Ridley: Motorway mileage — excluding slip roads — in Cumbria, Lancashire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester and Cheshire as at December 1984 was as follows:

	Trunk motorways	Principal motorways	All motorways
Cumbria	60	0	60
Lancashire	82	0	82
Merseyside	35	4	39
Greater Manchester	79	8	87
Cheshire	76	0	76

Motor Cycle Helmets (Replacement Visors)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to control the quality of motor cycle helmet replacement visors.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department has today circulated draft regulations which would require motor cycle helmet replacement visors to comply with the latest amendments to the relevant British standard. The main requirements are that no replacement visor should be so tinted as to reduce light transmission by more than 50 per cent., and that all visors should be made of material which is resistant to abrasion. The abrasion resistance requirement will also apply to visors sold with new helmets. Manufacturers and retailers will be consulted to ensure that adequate time is provided to set up the necessary arrangements and clear old stocks.

These regulations will make a positive contribution to road safety by removing from the market visors which are excessively dark or abrade easily, so reducing the motorcyclist's ability to see clearly.

British Rail (PSO Grant)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has set a cash ceiling on the central Government public service obligation grant to British Rail for 1985-86.

Mr. Ridley: The cash ceiling for the financial year 1985-86 will be £820 million. This is 10 per cent. less in constant prices—£42 million less in cash—than the ceiling for 1984. The figure reflects the progress which the board is making towards its PSO grant target.

The board will now submit a grant claim for 1985-86. The amount of grant actually paid will be settled, within the cash ceiling, in the light of that claim.

PRIME MINISTER

Peterhead

Q17. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Peterhead.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Local Government Services (Privatisation)

Q22. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with progress in privatisation of local government services.

The Prime Minister: No. That is why we have recently published proposals for legislation to extend competition to a wider range of local authority activities.

Graduate Engineers

Q121. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the demand in the United Kingdom for graduate engineers.

The Prime Minister: There is no precise measure of current or future demand for graduate engineers, and quality is as important as quantity, but there are strong indications of growing demand for greater numbers, primarily in areas relevant to information technology. We have already taken a number of steps to increase output and further measures will be announced later today.

Coal Industry

Q129. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister if she is yet in a position to announce the final cost to the Exchequer of the mining strike.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will deal with this in his Budget statement this afternoon.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will define the serious criminal offences she was referring to in her answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 774, about the coal industry.

The Prime Minister: The dismissal and re-employment of its employees are matters for the National Coal Board. The board has made it clear that all cases are considered on their merits, but that there can be no question of re-employing those who have committed acts of serious violence, intimidation or vandalism. The board has already exercised a considerable degree of discretion over dismissals; there have been over 4,000 convictions for offences relating to the coal dispute compared with some 900 dismissals, of whom 280 have been re-employed. This rate of dismissals is no higher than that which has normally occurred over the past five years in the industry. If any person considers that he has been unfairly dismissed he has the right to take his case to an industrial tribunal.

Young People (Unemployment)

133. Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the level of unemployment amongst young people.

The Prime Minister: The Government are concerned to see that there are constructive and worthwhile opportunities for young people. By introducing the youth training scheme in 1983 we took a major step to provide young people with better prospects. At a cost of some £800 million a year, the scheme guarantees a place to all unemployed 16-year-old leavers and also offers places to unemployed 17-year-old school leavers, and has helped about 700,000 youngsters already. The value of the training it provides is reflected in the fact that some 60 per cent. of those leaving the scheme get jobs.

More generally, our economic policies are designed to provide the conditions under which industry and commerce can create sustainable jobs.

Engagements

Mr. Strang asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 March.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 March.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Central America

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps have been taken following the meeting of European Economic Community Foreign Ministers in Costa Rica last September to provide aid to the countries of Central America; and whether Her Majesty's Government are planning to contribute to such aid programmes.

Mr. Raison: Since September 1984 the European Community has approved new aid projects costing some £16 million in Central America from its existing programme of aid to developing countries not associated with the Community. The European Commission is expected to present specific proposals to follow up the commitments made in Costa Rica for consideration by the member states in the near future. Community aid to the region will continue to be financed from the European budget, to which this country makes a substantial contribution.

International Organisations (Financial Contributions)

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions for 1985 are being made to the following international organisations: the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the World Health Organisation's special programme on human reproduction.

Mr. Raison: At the international population conference held in August 1984, my noble Friend Lord Glenarthur announced the Government's intention to contribute a total of £9·5 million in 1985 to multilateral population organisations. I have now agreed to increase this total sum to £11 million. The following pledges for 1985 have been made:

	£ million
International Planned Parenthood Federation	4·5
United Nations Fund for Population Activities	4·5
WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction	2·0

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Richard Page asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will make a statement about the future administration of the Government's scheme for accepting works of art in lieu of tax and for indemnifying owners of works of art who lend to appropriate bodies for public exhibition.

Mr. Waldegrave: The acceptance of works of art in lieu of tax and the provision of indemnity cover for public exhibitions call for detailed casework and for consultation with the Government's expert advisers. As from 1 April 1985, it has been decided that these activities can be most effectively co-ordinated by the Museums and Galleries Commission. At present the commission provides advice on the allocation to museums and galleries of works of art which the Government accept in lieu of tax; it also gives advice on the public interest and security aspects of the indemnities for which my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts is responsible. From 1 April the commission will take responsibility for the day-to-day administration of acceptances of works of art in lieu of tax, and for the indemnity scheme operated by the Minister for the Arts and the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales. The policy and decision making responsibilities of Ministers for these activities will remain unchanged. After 1 April applications for indemnities should be sent direct to the Museums and Galleries Commission: offers of works of art and other heritage property should continue to be made through the capital taxes offices in the first instance.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Library Service (Report)

Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to the report on the Public Library Service in Northern Ireland prepared by the Northern Ireland Assembly; and when he expects to be able to announce his decision.

Mr. Scott: The report made several important recommendations which are being carefully considered. My right hon. Friend will let the Assembly have the Government's response shortly.

Mobile Classrooms

Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mobile classrooms are erected at controlled primary and secondary schools in each of the Magherafelt, Cookstown, Strabane and Omagh district council areas; how many of these mobile classrooms have received appropriate planning permission; and at what schools these have not received planning permission.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

No. of Mobile Classrooms at

District Council Area	Controlled Primary Schools	Controlled Secondary Schools
Magherafelt	4	12
Cookstown	15	26
Strabane	15	19
Omagh	21	17

Planning permission has been received for 79 of these mobile classrooms. The schools at which planning permission has not been received are:

Magherafelt District Council area
Ampertaine primary
Maghera primary
Bellaghy primary
Kilross primary
Magherafelt secondary

Cookstown District Council area
Ballynenagh primary
Moneymore primary
Ballinderry primary
Toberlane primary
Cookstown primary
Cookstown high

Magherafelt-Moneymore Road

Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Department of the Environment is taking to ensure the safety of persons along the Magherafelt-Moneymore road.

Mr. Chris Patten: A review is in progress to determine the nature and the timing of works on this road.

Strip Searches (Armagh Prison)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, in December, January and February, respectively; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being concluded; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely making an appearance at Armagh court house on remand, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Scott: During December 1984, there was a total of 38 strip searches carried out on 23 prisoners; one prisoner was searched on three occasions; 13 on two occasions and nine once. During January 1985, there was a total of 36 strip searches carried out on 26 prisoners; one prisoner was searched on three occasions; eight on two occasions and 17 once. During February 1985, there were 50 strip searches carried out on 31 prisoners; 19 prisoners were searched on two occasions and 12 once. No prohibited articles were found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched. These searches were carried out in the following circumstances:

	Attending Armagh remand court	Attending trial	Inter-prison visits	Others*	Total
December 1984	1	—	—	37	38
January 1985	2	—	2	32	36
February 1985	1	1	2	46	50

* This category comprises searches in connection with first admission and final discharge, bail court appearances, attendance at other remand courts, appeal court hearings, outside hospital visits, the pre-release programme, and the home leave scheme.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will break down the published figures on the monthly incidence of strip searches in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, to indicate the reasons for each search, namely, making an appearance on remand at Armagh court house, attending trial, inter-prison visit, release on parole or other reasons.

Mr. Scott: The information in the form requested is available only from 1 June 1984. The breakdown is as follows:

	Attending Armagh remand court	Attending trial	Inter-prison visits	Home leave scheme	Others*	Total
1984
June	2	1	—	6	29	38
July	5	—	—	5	15	25
August	2	—	4	4	18	28
September	2	—	—	1	10	13
October	2	—	2	5	21	30
November	2	1	4	2	24	33
December	1	—	—	18	19	38
1985
January	2	—	2	—	32	36
February	1	1	2	2	44	50

* This category comprises searches in connection with first admission and final discharge, bail court appearances, attendance at other remand courts, appeal court hearings, outside hospital visits, pre-release programme and employment interviews.

Housing Executive (Painting Contracts)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the Northern Ireland Housing Executive is restricting tender documents for painting contracts to those painting firms which have previously carried out contracts to a value of £100,000 or over; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1985, c. 37]: I am advised by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the issue of tender documents for painting contracts is not restricted in the way suggested. Financial capacity and management resources are, however, assessed before the issue of invitations to tender for painting and other contracts.

DEFENCE

Porton Down (Yellow Rain)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the defence microbiological research laboratories at Porton Down have conducted research on samples of alleged yellow rain.

Mr. Lee: The Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, has conducted research on yellow rain samples as part of a continuing investigation into the alleged use of mycotoxins in south-east Asia. We are not yet in a position to make a statement about the results.

Low Frequency Communications (Scotland)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the feasibility study being conducted on prospects for extremely low frequency communications in Scotland.

Mr. Butler: Research on ELF is continuing with a view to validating the concept before determining whether it will have an operational role to play.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites being considered for the location of extremely low frequency antenna systems in Scotland.

Mr. Butler: I have nothing to add to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave to the hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Stewart) on 5 December 1984 at column 181. Consideration of possible sites remains at an early stage.

Nuclear Weapons (Testing)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any reciprocal arrangements with the United States Government in exchange for the British Government testing British nuclear warheads in the United States of America.

Mr. Butler: The United States and United Kingdom Governments jointly test United Kingdom nuclear devices at the Nevada test site in the United States of America as a part of the continuing exchanges which take place under the terms of the agreement between the Governments of the United Kingdom and United States of America for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, Cmnd. 537, July 1958, as amended.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence under which subheads in the Defence Estimates money is allocated for nuclear weapon testing.

Mr. Butler: Any such expenditure is borne on the defence procurement subheads of Vote 2 of the Defence Estimates.

NATO (Northern Europe)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to support the creation of a new North Atlantic Treaty Organisation command with responsibility for the defence of northern Europe.

Mr. Stanley: NATO's existing command structure takes full account of the importance of northern Europe. Any changes to NATO's command structure would be a matter for collective Alliance consideration; none is in prospect.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much money is allocated out of the research and development budget for defence for research on verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Butler: It would not be in the national interest to reveal details of the defence R and D effort devoted to verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what scientific investigations are being carried out at present on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to overcome any problems of verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Butler: The Ministry of Defence has a continuing programme of work on seismological monitoring and other technologies relevant to the verification of a comprehensive test ban. The Government tabled a working paper on these issues at the Geneva conference on disarmament in August 1983. In addition, we play a full part in the work of the conference on disarmament ad hoc group of scientific experts which considers international co-operation measures in detection and identification of seismic events, and we took part at the end of last year in a technical test of the worldwide collection and exchange of seismological data, the results of which are expected soon.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Libya (Terrorist Organisations)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Libya regarding Colonel Gaddafi's recent statement expressing willingness to support terrorist organisations such as the Irish Republican Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: At a meeting in Rome on 5 March with Libyan officials, British officials sought clarification of Colonel Gaddafi's recent statement, stressed to their Libyan counterparts that such statements were very damaging and warned that any evidence of Libyan support for terrorist organisations would be taken very seriously. They made clear that we would carefully assess Libyan actions and attitudes towards the United Kingdom in deciding how far we were prepared to deal with Libya in future.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in defining an exclusive fishing zone for the Falklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: As my right hon. and learned Friend said in the House during the debate on the Falklands—FAC report—on 14 March as reported in columns 495 and 496, the Government have decided to explore possible ways in which to establish a multilaterally based conservation and management regime for fisheries in the waters around the Falkland Islands. We are taking steps to develop that approach.

Gibraltar

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy not to enter into any further negotiations with the Government of Spain concerning the future of Gibraltar unless Spain ceases to supply arms to Argentina.

Mr. Rifkind: We continue to make our views on the supply of arms to Argentina known to our allies. Our relations with Spain are friendly as befits fellow members of the North Atlantic Alliance, and states soon to be partners in the European Community. It is in that context, and within the framework of the commitment given to the people of Gibraltar in the preamble to the 1969 Gibraltar constitution, that our discussions with Spain on Gibraltar are being held.

Non-proliferation Treaty (Review Conference)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British Government's preparations for the non-proliferation treaty third review conference in Geneva in September.

Mr. Luce: We are actively preparing for this important conference. British delegations attended the two preparatory committee meetings in 1984 and we will be represented at the third and last session of the preparatory committee in April. Our preparations have included regular consultations with the other depositaries of the treaty, the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Our intensive preparatory work reflects our firm commitment to the treaty and our determination that the conference will be successful.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the composition of the British delegation to the third review conference of the non-proliferation treaty in Geneva in September.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 28 January in column 39.

Trident

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the development of the British Trident system is compatible with the Government's obligations under article 6 of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Luce: Yes. Future acquisition of Trident will not violate article VI of the non-proliferation treaty, and will represent the minimum capability necessary to deter aggression. In accordance with this treaty article we remain committed to seeking agreements on effective nuclear arms control. The first priority must be balanced and verifiable reductions in the large arsenals of the superpowers.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom obtains arms and related material from South Africa other than those covered by United Nations Security Council Resolution 558 (1984).

Mr. Butler: I have been asked to reply.

The Ministry of Defence has no contracts for the purchase of any such equipment from South Africa.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sugar Beet

Mr. Hordern asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the Agricultural and Food Research Council makes no charge for work on sugar beet; and what is the cost of the subsidy given for this purpose.

Mr. MacGregor: Under the Food Act 1984 my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales and I are required to draw up a programme of research and education in matters affecting the growing of sugar beet and to provide for its funding. The cost of the programme is met through a levy on the growers of sugar beet and on British Sugar plc. Under these arrangements all work carried out in AFRC institutes and elsewhere is paid for in full. There is no element of subsidy.

The programme for 1985-86 is set out in the Sugar Beet (Research and Education) Order 1985, which was laid on 11 March 1985.

Pesticides

Mr. Forman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received advocating the introduction of efficiency tests or standards for pesticide spray application equipment, based upon the number of droplets it produces per unit area of the target.

Mrs. Fenner: None in such specific terms. However, the testing of spraying equipment under the Food and Environment Protection Bill was advocated by a number of speakers during debate on the Bill in another place and by some organisations in their comments on the proposals for legislation.

Mr. Forman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has made, or is aware of, regarding the effect of the rodenticide Brodifacoum and its effects on barn owls and other birds of prey.

Mrs. Fenner: Before any rodenticide is cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme notifiers must supply data on studies of toxicity to non-target species including wildlife populations. This data is then scrutinised by Government experts and by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, its scientific sub-committee and its specialist environmental panel. Only when this examination of the data has satisfied Government Departments that, provided the recommended precautions are followed, the product can be used with minimal risk to wildlife is the product cleared for use in the United Kingdom. All clearances are kept under review and can be withdrawn or amended in the light of new evidence of risk.

Brodifacoum has been scrutinised in this way. The possibility of a risk to predators such as owls from its persistence in rodent carcases was identified and, for this reason, the chemical currently has commercial clearance for indoor use only. However, further data from small-scale trials have been submitted to the environmental panel and will be forwarded to the scientific sub-committee for consideration in due course.

As part of our continuous surveillance of pesticides use, my Department operates a wildlife incident investigation scheme under which all reported incidents of suspected pesticide poisoning of wildlife are investigated. The results are taken into account in the review of clearances. No incidents linking barn owl deaths in the United Kingdom with the use of Brodifacoum have been reported. There have been reports of owl deaths in Malaysia associated with the widespread outdoor use of Brodifacoum, but the circumstances of this use are radically different from those which pertain in the United Kingdom.

Dairy Produce

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the figures for the import to and export from the United Kingdom of dairy produce under individual product headings, for the past five years, indicating in each case the importing and exporting nation concerned.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is published annually by Her Majesty's Stationery Office for the major trading nations concerned in reports entitled "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom".

Food Labelling

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has not involved the Health Education Council in the preliminary discussions his Department is conducting with industry regarding the current plans for nutritional labelling of food.

Mrs. Fenner: The informal discussions which have taken place between MAFF and DHSS officials and representatives of the food industry were essentially to consider the practicalities of fat content labelling of food and did not involve issues of health and safety at work. Following my announcement on 12 March, at column 79, of initial proposals in response to the recommendations of the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy on diet and cardiovascular disease we intend to consult widely with all interested parties (including the Health Education Council) before drawing up firm proposals for further labelling requirements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Schools (Computers)

61. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy not to support the supply to schools of computers manufactured by companies whose ownership is outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: The only central Government financial support to schools for the purchase of computers has been provided by my Department under the micros for schools schemes, which enabled schools to buy a range of computer equipment at half price.

The equipment for those schemes, which have now been successfully completed, was chosen on a combination of educational, technical and commercial grounds. No decisions have yet been made as to whether there is a case for further direct intervention, but the choice of any equipment for future schemes will be based on the same considerations.

Indirect support for computers in schools, such as curriculum development and teacher training, will continue to be be based on those machines currently used in sufficient volume in schools to justify such support.

62. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is planning to increase computer technology facilities in primary and secondary schools in 1985-86.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for the overall level of computer technology facilities rests with the local educational authorities and individual schools and I welcome the fact that both LEAs and schools are devoting additional resources to this area.

My Department can, through further limited financial support, encourage schools to invest in new areas of technology with which they might otherwise be reluctant to become involved.

The micros in schools schemes were an exellent example of this in that schools were helped with the purchase of their first computer and as a result most schools have developed their computer facilities from their own resources.

We continue to pay close attention to developments in educational technology, and are considering whether further assistance might be undertaken in 1985-86 or subsequent years.

Scrap Metal

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has made representations to the European Commission about the level of prices of scrap metal as a raw material.

Mr. Butcher: The only grounds for making such representation under the Treaty of Paris are that there is a serious shortage. This is not the case as the United Kingdom has an annual surplus of supply over demand of the order of 4 million tonnes. However, I expect this subject to be on the agenda for discussion at the meeting of the Council of EC Industry Ministers on 26 March.

Lonrho

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions and for what purposes his Department has initiated inquiries into Lonrho; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: On 23 May 1973 the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry appointed inspectors under section 165*(b)* of the Companies Act 1948 to conduct an investigation into Lonrho Ltd. following boardroom disputes. In addition, the following proposed acquisitions by Lonrho have been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973: Lonrho/Scottish and Universal Investments, on which the Commission reported in 1979, and Lonrho/House of Fraser, on which the Commission reported in 1981 and 1985. The purpose of these investigations was to establish, in each case, whether a merger situation existed and whether it might be expected to operate against the public interest.

Lonrho was also involved in the recent investigation into the membership of House of Fraser plc carried out by Mr. John Griffiths QC under section 172 of the Companies Act 1948.

Weighing Equipment

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received the final report of the Eden committee on "Metrological Control of Equipment for Use for Trade"; if he will place a copy in the Library; how soon he expects to determine his policy on its recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I have just received the report of the Eden committee on metrological control. I shall study its contents carefully and expect it to publish the report as soon as possible. It is too early to estimate when recommendations might be implemented since extensive consultation may be necessary beforehand.

Cable Television

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is taking any action to ensure that companies obtaining a licence to operate a cable television service avoid siting fixed equipment on pavements in such a way that it presents a hazard and obstruction for disabled people; and if he will be issuing any specific guidance on the subject.

Mr. Butcher: Where my right hon. Friend grants a licence to a cable operator under section 7 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 and applies to that operator the telecommunications code (which gives powers to install apparatus) he will ensure that conditions are included governing the manner in which apparatus is to be installed. It is intended that such conditions should refer, among other things, to the prevention of safety hazards and to other obligations designed to ensure that the interests of the disabled are properly protected.

Regional Industrial Policy

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria were used, when drawing up his revised regional industrial policy, in relation to the different categories of unemployment, long term unemployment, job opportunities, industrial structure and peripherality, referred to in his statement of 28 November 1984, Official Report, column 942.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on the new assisted areas were based on an assessment of each travel-to-work-area's current and future needs for additional employment opportunities. The factors taken into account were those which were both available on a comparable basis throughout Great Britain and significant aids to such an assessment. However, map decisions are not entirely susceptible of statistical treatment, and statistics were therefore used to inform but not to dictate the circumstances.

Information Technology Equipment

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on information technology equipment imports from the Republic of South Korea.

Mr. Butcher: Imports from the Republic of Korea of IT equipment and components (defined as activity headings 3301, 3302, 3441, 3443, 3444, 3453 and 3454) in the past five years have been as follows (£'000):

	£'000
1980	24,960
1981	24,184
1982	31,493
1983	46,072
1984	88,984

Dr McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, if, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 278, he will provide a breakdown, by each sector of the information technology industry, namely, office machinery, electronic data processing equipment, telecommunications equipment, radio and electronic capital goods, electronic components and sub-assemblies and electronic consumer goods, of the balance of trade for each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 18 March1985, c. 346]

The information required is:

Balance of trade (exports fob-imports cif)

Note. The Activity Headings (Standard Industrial Classification, revised 1980 required by the question and given above are regarded as constituting the information technology industry. A slightly wider defintion—including electrical instruments and control systems (AH 3442 in the Standard Industrial Classification, revised 1980)—was used for the answer on 21 January 1985.
* First 3 quarters.

House of Fraser (Purchase)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries he is making when considering whether to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the purchase of the House of Fraser by the Al-Fayed family about the business backgrounds of members of that family; and if he is making any inquiries of the Egyptian Government.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend announced on 14 March that he had decided in accordance with the recommendation of the Director General of Fair Trading not to refer the proposed acquisition of House of Fraser plc by Al-Fayed Investment Holdings plc to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In considering whether to make a reference he took into account the statements made and assurances given by the Al-Fayed family about its intentions with regard to House of Fraser, the support given to those statements and assurances by Kleinwort, Benson Ltd. and the fact that the board of House of Fraser and its advisers S G Warburg and Co. Ltd. intended to recommend the offer for acceptance.

Motor Vehicle Distribution Systems

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation in the United Kingdom of the European Community Commission's regulation concerning the motor vehicle distribution systems published on 18 January.

Mr. Fletcher: The Government very much welcome the adoption of this regulation, which seeks not only to give greater legal certainty to dealers and manufacturers but to ensure that selective distribution systems do not partition the Community's internal market. The Government believe that the regulation will give consumers greater freedom to buy from dealers in other member states if they wish, which in turn should add impetus to the present trend towards a narrowing of price differences between member states. The Government look to the Commission to ensure that the regulation, which comes into force on 1 July 1985, is effective. They are proposing to the Commission that the effect of the regulation as well as any practical problems it raises for dealers and manufacturers should be reviewed after a reasonable trial period.

SCOTLAND

Road Building (Contracts)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the 10 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road construction contracts in the past three years, giving for each contractor the total value of contracts received.

Mr. Ancram: During the three years ended 28 February 1985, 90 contracts each costing over £100,000 were awarded to 39 contractors. The 10 contractors who received the largest total shares of these contracts were as follows:

	£ million
1. Balfour Beatty Ltd.	27·5
2. Fairclough Civil Engineering Ltd.	17·1
3. Tractor Shovels (Contracts) Ltd.	14·3
4. Norwest Holst Ltd.	12·3
5. Tarmac Construction Ltd.	11·2
6. Shanks and McEwan Ltd.	8·7
7. Whatlings (Civil Engineering) Ltd.	8·6
8. W. J. Barr and Sons (Scotland) Ltd.	6·4
9. A. Monk and Co. plc.	6·2
10. Rush and Tompkins Ltd.	6·0

Dornoch Firth (Road Bridge)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the proposed road bridge across the Dornoch Firth will be subject to tolls.

Mr. Ancram: No.

Schools (Capitation Allowance)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much each authority provides to its schools in capitation allowance (a) at the latest available date and (b) in 1977-78 expressed (i) at current prices and (ii) in 1977-78 prices in each case.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Individual education authorities are responsible for determining capitation allowances, and information about these is not held centrally.

Redundancies

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of redundancies notified in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency for each year since 1970.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The Manpower Services Commission compiles information on redundancies affecting 10 or more workers, but separate figures for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private residential homes have been registered with his Department since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: Statutory responsibility for the registration of residential establishments provided for social work purposes rests primarily with local authorities. It is open to my right hon. Friend to direct that applications for registration should be made to him in particular cases, but he has not exercised this power since 1979.

Scottish Development Agency (Grants and Loans)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek from the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency information about grants or loans awarded by the agency over the past six months to individuals whose financial affairs had at the time been put in trust; if he will publish details in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Forest Estates (Sales)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the forest estates, together with their acreage, which have been sold by the Forestry Commission over the last 12 months.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of adverse reactions received in the years 1977 to 1984 for each of the licensed benzodiazepine products; and if any of the benzodiazepine products that will remain available for prescription on the National Health Service present adverse reaction problems not reported in other benzodiazepine products which are included on the list of drugs no longer prescribable on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested relating to licensed benzodiazepine medicinal products is set out in the table. It is important to note that an adverse reaction report to the Committee on Safety of Medicines does not necessarily demonstrate a causal relationship between the reaction and the medicine concerned.

Some benzodiazepine products that will remain available in the National Health Service after 1 April 1985 have been suspected of adverse reactions which have not been reported for products that will not be so available. However, it should be borne in mind that the number and type of adverse reactions associated with a medicine depend in part on its licensed indications and volume of prescribing. The fact that a medicine may have been the subject of more or different adverse reactions reports than others does not necessarily mean that it is less safe than the others. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has advised that when used in accordance with its respective data sheets the benefits of benzodiazepines outweigh their risks.

Social Protection (Expenditure)

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables in the Official Report, with such information as he has, for West Germany and France, as well as for the United Kingdom on expenditure on social protection in similar form to that used in Economic Trends, December 1984, page 91.

Mr. Whitney: Estimated expenditure on social protection in West Germany, France and the United Kingdom in 1982 was as follows:

Social Protection Expenditure, by Function, 1982 (In Billions of National Monetary Units)

Function	West Germany (DM billion)			France (Fr. billion)			United Kingdom (£ billion)
	Benefits in cash	Benefits in kind	Total	Benefits in cash	Benefits in kind	Total	Benefits in cash	Benefits in kind	Total
1. Sickness	28·17	94·90	123·07	23·69	215·32	239·00	2·91	10·47	13·38
2. Invalidity disablement, occupational accidents and diseases	36·53	14·39	50·94	64·71	18·00	82·71	3·66	2·48	6·14
3. Old age and survivors	178·05	19·37	197·42	382·75	9·70	392·45	26·01	1·11	27·12
4. Family and maternity	29·97	4·99	34·97	91·31	21·54	112·87	5·33	2·46	7·79
5. Unemployment and promotion of employment	23·84	16·64	40·49	90·87	—	90·87	7·43	0·30	7·73
6. Housing	0·15	3·81	3·96	—	25·36	25·36	1·02	—	1·02
7. Miscellaneous	1·11	1·94	3·05	2·29	0·21	2·50	0·22	0·48	0·70
Total	297·84	156·06	453·90	655·62	290·14	962·80	46·58	17·30	63·88

The following points should be noted:

(i) The data are exactly as given in the Eurostat Social Protection Statistical Bulletin, No. 1, 1984. Apart from minor inconsistencies, attributable to roundings, in the totals for West Germany and France, there appears to be a major inconsistency in the French data: total benefits in cash plus total benefits in kind do not sum to the total expenditure figure shown. This inconsistency should be corrected in the next issue of the statistical bulletin, which is due to be published later this month.

(ii) The data are shown in billions of national monetary units for 1982, and are provisional. To convert the West German and French figures into sterling equivalents, use may be made of purchasing power parity exchange rates. The relevant rates for 1982 were: DM 1 = £0·225 and Fr. 1 = £0·068.

(iii) The figures have been harmonised in accordance with the European System of Integrated Social Protection Statistics (ESSPROS).

(iv) It should be noted that data for social protection expenditure do not include fiscal benefits or capital transactions.

(v) The figures cover both Government and non-Government—for example, occupational pensions—programmes, but information is not available for West Germany or France on the division of social protection expenditure between the two, as shown for the United Kingdom in "Economic Trends", December 1984, page 91.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the saving to the Exchequer in Wales from his limiting of board and lodging payments to an average of £50 per week.

Mr. Whitney: Estimates of savings in respect of Wales are not available separately. The total estimated savings from all the proposals set out in the consultative document on board and lodging are expected to be of the order of £70 million in 1985-86 and somewhat higher in subsequent years.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the drugs and medicines specifically excluded from his limited list of prescribable drugs were not prescribable to National Health Service patients at the time the final list was originally published.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All of the products which will cease to be available under the National Health Service on 1 April were prescribable, at National Health Service expense, when the final version of the selected list was announced. About 60 of them were, however, subject to recommendations of the advisory committee on borderline substances that they were not drugs in the circumstances of general practice and so should not be prescribed.

Child Benefit

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families are currently in receipt of child benefit payments from his Department; what proportion of the total number of families in the United Kingdom this figure represents; what is the current annual cost of child benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: About 6·9 million beneficiaries in Great Britain, close to 100 per cent. of those eligible, receive child benefit and the estimated cost for 1984-85 is £4·3 billion.

Benefits (Review)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress he has made in his review of the benefits system; when he hopes to propose changes in the present system to Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 12 March at column 107.

Health Authorities (Executive Directors)

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many executive directors of the 14 regional health authorities have been recruited, differentiating between those recruited from within the National Health Service and those from outside.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regional general managers have so far been appointed by 13 of the 14 regional health authorities. Twelve come from within the NHS and one from outside.

NHS (Training Allowances)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if circular RPO/84/12, relating to the effect of implementing the revised training allowances agreement on the provision of clinical training for professions allied to medicine and speech therapists, has now been sent to all regional personnel officers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The paper to which my hon. Friend refers was tabled for discussion at two meetings of departmental officials and regional personnel officers in April and June last year. The paper was circulated in advance as a matter of routine in order to enable participants to prepare for the discussion.

Charges

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will break down the net increase of £40 million in total income from charges following his statement of 11 March, Official Report, column 22, showing the amount attributable to increases in (a) prescription charges and pre-payment certificates, (b) dental charges, (c) elastic stockings and tights, wigs and fabric supports, (d) charges for private patients and (e) charges for overseas visitors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is as follows:

	£ million
a. Prescription charges and prepayment certificates	19
b. Dental charges	49
c. Elastic stockings and tights, wigs and fabric supports	*1
d. Charges for private patients	4
e. Charges for overseas visitors	0·1
f. Other	†1
	74
Less: Loss of income on the General Ophthalmic Services	(−) 35
	39

* Estimate (not separately identified)
† Mainly additional income from road traffic accident charges and blood handling charges.

Open University

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the effect on disabled persons and their employment prospects of reductions in courses at the Open University; if he is taking any action in this regard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are currently considering whether any help might be given where the Open University is engaged in fields concerned with disability. Last year we agreed to provide £100,000 over two years to MENCAP to enable the Open University to develop a course designed to help carers of mentally handicapped people.

Disabled People (Report)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the report of a comparison of social services for people with disabilities in the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, published by the Royal Association for Disablement and Rehabilitation, a copy of which has been sent to him; what response Her Majesty's Government are making to this report; if he will now commission a study of comparative positions in the whole of the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: This report is a welcome addition to the information already available about various aspects of provision for disabled people in European countries. We have no plans to commission an additional study of our own.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what direct or indirect support he provides to the Open University to provide graduate education for disabled persons; if he will increase such provision by direct or indirect means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have kept in close touch with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science. We fully support the action he has taken in response to the report of the Open University visiting committee and welcome the recommendation in that report that the Open University should protect its services for disabled students.

"The Health Service in England"

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many copies of his Departments' leaflet, "The Health Service in England," were printed; and at what cost.

Mr. John Patten: Some 450,000 copies of the leaflet were printed. The cost of printing and distributing it to regional health authorities was £6,370.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he had with National Health Service trade unions before publishing his leaflet, "The Health Service in England".

Mr. John Patten: None. The leaflet is a summary of factual material—already published in the 1984 annual report on the Health Service in England: October 1984: HMSO £6·95 — on which there was no cause for consultation.

"Mortgage Repayment Difficulties"

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the recommendations of the Building Societies Association report, "Mortgage Repayment Difficulties" a copy of which has been sent to him, in so far as they relate to his responsibilities.

Mr. Whitney: We have read this report with interest, particularly those parts of it which discuss the help which can be given with mortgage interest payments to those getting supplementary benefit. The whole question of help with housing costs is currently under consideration as part of the social security reviews.

Energy Saver Scheme

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish full details of his Department's energy saver scheme available to applicants in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: People eligible for supplementary benefit whose homes are draughty may be entitled to lump sum payments to buy materials for simple measures to reduce draughts. They may also be entitled to payments to buy hot water cylinder jackets. The normal rules for entitlement to single payments apply so that, for example, claimants with savings over £500 are expected to put the excess towards the cost of the items concerned. In addition, local authorities can give grants towards the cost of loft insulation through the homes insulation scheme.

Mentally Ill Patients, Salford

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) on 12 March concerning mentally ill patients in Salford, he will make a statement on the representations made to him by the Salford city council and the Salford health authority; what assessment he made of the problems they drew to his attention with particular reference to Prestwich hospital and what response he made.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Extremely Low Frequency Communications

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will commission a study of the effects of extremely low frequency communications on human beings.

Mr. John Patten: At the moment we do not see a need to commission such a study. We shall, however, continue to keep the subject under review.

Prescribing Levels

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will monitor quantities per item prescribed in order to check the effect of increased charges on prescribing levels.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: General practitioner prescribing is already monitored.

NHS (General Services)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 21 December, at columns 412 to 414, he will provide figures for expenditure by the family practitioner services, the Dental Estimates Board, the Prescription Pricing Authority and other special health authorities providing National Health Service central services for 1983-84; and if he will also publish comparable figures, at current and at 1983-84 prices, and comparable percentages for 1960 and 1970, for the above categories and those in the original answer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1985, c. 414]: The tables give the analysis of expenditure requested as far as it can be provided on a comparable basis.

The figures for 1960-61, 1970-71 and 1983-84 are derived from the annual accounts of health authorities—and their predecessor hospital authorities, executive councils, etc.—in England for the respective financial years. Those for 1960-61 and 1970-71 at 1983-84 prices are calculated from the base years' figures by adjusting for general inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator at market prices.

Comparisons over this long period cannot be entirely reliable because of changes in the structure of GDP and in the organisation of the NHS.

1. The figures do not include expenditure on community health and ambulance services which prior to NHS re-organisation on 1 April 1974 were the responsibility of local government authorities.
2. The administrative expenses of executive councils which were responsible for the administration of family practitioner services are included in the table as such costs are reflected in the annual accounts of health authorities from 1974-75. For 1960-61 an apportionment of composite England and Wales figures was necessary to derive figures for England only.
3. For years prior to 1974-75 the analyses of expenditure by type provided by the annual accounts are less detailed than those for later years and analyses by function were not prepared.
4. "Other expenses" includes the total non-pay expenditure on the blood transfusion and mass radiography services for which component details are not readily available—£1·0 million in 1960-61 and £1·8 million 1970-71 (£7·0 million and £8·2 million at 1983-84 prices).
5. Total capital expenditure by the authorities whose current expenditure is included in the table was £25·1 million in 1960-61 and £119·2 million in 1970-71 (£175·7 million and £545·9 million at 1983-84 prices).

1. The table shows total payments made to doctors, pharmacists, dentists, opticians and others contracted to the NHS to provide family practitioner services (FPS).
2. Annual accounts of health authorities (and their predecessor executive councils) provide one analysis only of such expenditure which assigns it functionally to service.
3. The table shows 1960-61 and 1970-71 FPS expenditure categorised as far as practicable in the same format as that of the annual white papers on the summarised accounts of health authorities since 1974-75. Thus, charges to patients retained by pharmacists, dentists and opticians are reflected in the table but other items of FPS income collected by health authorities (or executive councils) such as charges to patients for dental treatment at health centres and receipts from the sale of prescription charge pre-payment certificates, are excluded.
4. For 1960-61 the accounts provide separate services totals for England and similar totals for Wales with detailed analyses of only the composite England and Wales totals. It has therefore been necessary to derive the detailed figures for England pro-rata.
5. All spending on FPS is regarded as current expenditure. Some relatively insignificant costs strictly of a capital nature (relating only to certain payments made to general medical practitioners for practice accommodation) are however included.

1. The table shows summaries of the detailed accounts of the Dental Estimates Board (DEB), the Prescription Pricing Authority (PPA) and its predecessor Joint Pricing Committee for England (JPC); together with a composite summary of the accounts for 1983-84 only of other special health authorities providing NHS central services.
2. (a) Other special health authorities providing NHS central services comprise:
   (i) the Central Blood Laboratories Authority (CBLA)—established 1 December 1982.
   (ii) the Mental Health Act Commission—established 1 September 1983.

(iii) the Rampton Hospital Review Board—established 11 June 1981.
(iv) the Rural Dispensing Committee—established 1 April 1983.

(b) The expenses of two analogous authorities are excluded. The first is the Health Service Supply Council, established on 14 July 1980, the expenses of which are met in full from charges made to regional health authorities. The second is the National Health Service Training Authority which was established on 1 October 1983 and whose first complete financial year ends on 31 March 1985.

(c) The functions of all these special health authorities are either new or were devolved by the Department and comparable figures for 1960-61 and 1970-71 are consequently not available.

3. Capital expenditure by the DEB and the JPC is not separately identifiable and is included in the totals. The amounts are known to be insignificant except that there was substantial capital expenditure by the DEB in 1970-71.
For 1983-84 the PPA and the CBLA recorded capital expenditure of £2·8 million and £5·4 million. These sums are excluded from the table.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many discharges from hospital there were following diagnosis of septic abortion in each of the following years: 1967, 1968, 1969, 1975, 1980, 1982 and 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 20 February, c. 501]: I regret that the estimate given for the number of discharges, including deaths, from NHS hospitals in England and Wales with main diagnosis of septic abortion in 1982 was incorrect. The revised estimate is 390.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he estimates in (a) staff, (b) running costs (c) repair costs and (d) the sale or lease of buildings from the closure of 21 national reassessment centres.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 1 March, c. 338]: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to the closure of the Department's 23 resettlement units. As the process of consultation referred to in my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 5 February at column 548-49 has not yet begun, it is not possible to give a realistic estimate of savings in any of the categories listed. The hon. Member may wish to be aware, however, that the approximate annual amount saved from the closure of re-establishment centres which will be made available to provide better resettlement facilities is £2 million.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is aware of any studies relating to myopia in connection with organophosphorus pesticide exposure among schoolchildren in Japan; and what studies have been conducted into similar effects in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 March, column 412]: We are aware of two Japanese studies. One showed a correlation between the amount of organophosporus pesticides used one year and incidence in myopia in schoolchildren the following year. Later work showed that peaks in the earlier incidence of myopia corresponded with peaks in the amounts of these pesticides sold. The evidence available at present suggests that the studies were not particularly soundly based, and there are other Japanese papers which criticise these types of studies and argue against organophosphorus pesticides being a major or even probable cause of myopia in young people.

Organophosphorus pesticides can cause eye effects, but these are transient, wearing off as the pesticide disappears fairly rapidly from the tissues, as it does from food. Because of the approved methods of use in the United Kingdom, people should not be exposed to this pesticide, and food surveys have not found any appreciable residues of these substances; there may be different routes of exposure in Japan.

No studies are being sponsored by the Government as there is not considered to be a problem in this country. However, any further information from Japan or elsewhere will be carefully considered.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of extending long-term supplementary benefit to people who have been unemployed for more than 12 months in 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 4 March, c. 413]: It is estimated that the cost would be about £500 million in 1985-86. For the purpose of this costing there would be no offsetting savings from other benefits and the net and gross costs are therefore the same.

Lynders Wood Court, Braintree

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many residents at Lynders Wood court, London road, Black Notley, Braintree, Essex, are supplementary pensioners; and how many of them are (a) being paid board and lodging allowance or (b) allowances for residential care.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, on 8 March 1985, c. 650]: Lynders Wood court, London road, Black Notley, Braintree, Essex, has only one resident in receipt of a supplementary pension who is being paid a board and lodging allowance. This establishment is not regarded as a residential care home for supplementary benefit purposes.

Departmental Managers (Accounting)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what accounting developments are being made in his Department to give line managers better information about the cost and condition of the capital assets they are managing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 18 March, c. 381]: The budgetary control system under development in our Department provides line managers with regular information about expenditure on capital assets and on their associated running costs. We have just completed our own feasibility study on the introduction of an assets register for computers, and are awaiting the results of a study by the Management and Personnel Office into assets registers for other types of capital assets.

The present procedures for managing capital in the National Health Service, and the part played by the accounting system, have recently been reviewed by a working group of the Association of Health Service Treasurers on which our Department and the Treasury are also represented. I understand that the association expects to send us the working party's report shortly, and we shall then be considering its proposals.

ENERGY

National Coal Board

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation to effect a capital reconstruction of the National Coal Board.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the revised deficit grant for the National Coal Board proposed for the current year following the end of the miners' strike; and how this figure compares with those for the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: As regards the NCB's deficit in the current year, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend has given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost). The amounts of deficit grant accrued in the NCB's accounts in the past five years are:

	£ million
1979-80	159
1980-81	149
1981-82	428
1982-83	374
1983-84	875

Deep-Mined Coal

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what, in the light of the ending of the miners' strike, he estimates will be the production of deep-mined coal in 1985; and what are the revised projections for 1986-87.

Mr. David Hunt: Deep-mined coal production in 1985 will be seriously affected by the strike in the coal industry and its aftermath. I am not in a position to forecast the precise level of deep-mined production in 1985 or later years.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what, in the light of the ending of the miners' strike, is the current average cost of producing deep-mined coal from National Coal Board pits.

Mr. David Hunt: The average cost of producing deep-mined coal has been distorted by the effects of industrial action in the coal industry since mid-1983, and will continue to be so affected for many months until the NCB has fully recovered from the effects of the strike. A meaningful figure for current average production costs is therefore impossible to determine. It is the Government's objective that the industry should reduce its average costs and return to profitability.

Coal Miners (Dismissals)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the number of miners who have been dismissed for criminal damage to National Coal Board property; and if he will list the figures by area.

Mr. David Hunt: The dismissal and re-employment of its employees are matters for the National Coal Board. If any person considers that he has been unfairly dismissed, he has the right to take his case to an industrial tribunal.

NCB (Cash Requirement)

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy what the National Coal Board deficit and external cash requirement for 1984-85 will be; and how he intends that the deficit should be financed.

Mr. Peter Walker: The NCB is still assessing the financial damage inflicted on the industry by the strike. This will take some time to complete. It has told me, however, that its deficit on revenue account is likely to be at least £1,850 million. The aftermath of the strike will moreover cause additional losses for the board in 1985-86. The NCB's external cash requirement for 1984-85 is expected to be about £1,800 million — some £706 million in excess of the board's EFL.

The Government can meet £1,108 million of the revenue account deficit by grant within the ceiling set by the Coal Industry Act 1983. Decisions about the remainder will be taken when the outturn result for the year is more certain. However, the Government intend shortly to introduce a Bill to enable payments of deficit grant to the NCB to continue during the period of reconstruction following the strike, and my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury is presenting an Estimate to the House today which provides for payments of deficit grant to the NCB in 1985-86—totalling £1,000 million. This sum takes account of the outstanding amount of this year's deficit and may be sufficient to make some provision for the deficit which the NCB may incur in 1985-86. There will, however, need to be a re-assessment when a fuller picture of the NCB's financial prospects following the strike is available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners there are in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: As at 12 March 1985 there were 294 prisoners permanently categorised A and 141 provisionally categorised A.

Parole Statistics

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners serving determinate sentences of over five years for offences of violence or trafficking in drugs were granted parole between January and June 1983 and 1984, respectively;

(2) how many prisoners serving determinate sentences of over five years for offences of violence or trafficking in drugs were considered for parole between January to June 1983 and 1984, respectively;

Mr. Mellor: The information available is given in the following table, which also revises the figures given in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 21 February 1985, at column 514, for the numbers within the scope of the policy announced on 30 November 1983, who were granted release eights months or more before the end of their sentence.

Surveillance (Video Cameras)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has initiated to inform the chief constables of Kent and Sussex of his Department's guidelines on the use of video cameras for covert and speculative surveillance.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The criteria for the use of equipment in police surveillance operations, and the procedures for their authorisation, are set out in the Home Office guidelines which were issued to all chief constables in England and Wales on 19 December 1984. These guidelines are considerably more detailed and rigorous than the guidance issued in 1977, which they replace.

Prisoners and Sentencing Policy

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population and what proportion this represents of total prison capacity; whether he has any proposals to seek to reduce the number of imprisonable offences within the context of petty crime; what is his long-term policy on imprisonment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The prison population on 8 March 1985 was 45,198, nearly 16 per cent. above the certified normal accommodation.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no present proposals to remove imprisonment as the maximum penalty for minor offences which are currently imprisonable. This would be unlikely to have any significant effect on the prison population.

We support the view reflected in judgments given by the Court of Appeal that the most serious offences, especially of violence, call for long periods in custody, but otherwise a custodial sentence should be avoided where possible and, if unavoidable, should be for the shortest period which is reasonable in the circumstances of the case. Among the measures which we have taken to encourage the appropriate use of non-custodial measures are the enactment in the Criminal Justice Act 1982 of strengthened non-custodial powers for the courts and the provision of additional resources for the probation service to enable more offenders to be dealt with satisfactorily in the community.

The recent increase in the prison population is attributable in large measure to an increase in the number of prisoners awaiting trial. The measures which my right hon. and learned Friends the Lord Chancellor and the Home Secretary are pursuing to tackle court delay have the object, among others, of reducing time spent on remand in custody. We have also brought forward proposals, in the Prosecution of Offences Bill, for a system of statutory time limits on the period before trial.

Our prison building programme is designed to provide enough accommodation for those who have to be imprisoned. With its expansion and acceleration, we have the prospect of achieving an end to overcrowding by the end of the decade.

Community Service

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to extending community service into the area of civil defence; whether he has had any discussions or received any proposals on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I share my hon. Friend's interest in securing that work done by offenders under community service orders should be as useful and constructive as possible, but I doubt whether it would be practicable to encourage probation committees to extend the schemes into the area of civil defence. My right hon. and learned Friend has received no proposals to do so.

Palace of Westminster (Members' Access)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the orders given to his officers regarding enforcement of the Sessional Order of the House to the Metropolitan police regarding access to the Palace of Westminster by hon. Members; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In furtherance of the Sessional Orders the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis gives the following directions to his officers under section 52 of the Metropolitan Police Act 1839:

"(1) That they shall disperse all assemblies or processions of persons causing or likely to cause obstruction or disorder on any day on which Parliament is sitting within the area specified hereunder:—

East side of the River Thames between Waterloo and Vauxhall Bridges, Vauxhall Bridge Road, Victoria Street (between Vauxhall Bridge Road and Buckingham Palace Road, Grosvenor Gardens, Grosvenor Place, Piccadilly, Coventry Street, New Coventry Street, Leicester Square (north side), Cranbourn Street, Long Acre, Bow Street, Wellington Street, crossing Strand and Victoria Embankment to Waterloo Bridge.

Provided that processions may be routed along the thoroughfares named except Victoria Embankment west of Waterloo Bridge.

(2) That they shall prevent or remove any other cause of obstruction within the said area so that every facility shall be afforded for the free passage of Peers and Members to and from the Houses of Parliament on any day on which Parliament is sitting."

If my hon. Friend has a particular problem in mind I invite him to write to me.

MI5 (Director General)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for the newly appointed director general of MI5, to have an annual meeting with hon. Members.

Mr. Brittan: No.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Independent Schools (Tax Rebates)

60. Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Her Majesty's Government will make it policy that tax rebates be given to those parents who send their children to independent schools.

Mr. Moore: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Retirement Benefit Schemes

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the current value of the funds held by private schemes to provide retirement benefits for the self-employed and for employees entitled to subscribe to such schemes with the benefit of tax exemption; and what is the value of the funds held for employees in approved private sector occupational schemes.

Mr. Moore: I regret the delay in replying. Total net assets of superannuation funds established by private sector employers were about £62·5 billion at the end of 1983. In addition, some 40 per cent. of the £95·9 billion net assets of long-term insurance funds is estimated to relate to pension business, including personal pensions. I regret that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the value of assets corresponding to personal pensions. In 1983, however, about 20 per cent. of premiums received by life assurance companies in respect of pension business related to personal pensions.

Venture Capital and Business Expansion Schemes

Mr. Conway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many applications for tax allowance under the venture capital scheme have been made from the Shrewsbury and Atcham area;

(2) how many applications for tax relief under the business expansion scheme have been made from the Shrewsbury and Atcham area.

Mr. Moore: I regret that the information required to answer these questions is not available centrally.

Social Security (Taxation)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change since 1978-79 in receipts from the taxation of social security benefits.

Mr. Moore: Estimates of the yield of income tax on current grants from general Government to the personal sector (in effect the yield from those social security benefits liable to tax) are shown for each calendar year to 1983 in table 9.6 of the 1984 edition of "UK National Accounts" (the CSO Blue Book). In this table, tax in respect of current grants is calculated by applying the individual's average rate of tax (that is the ratio of total tax due to total income liable to tax) to his or her receipt of taxable grants and summing over taxpayers.

Infrastructure (Investment)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost per job of additional public investment in the infrastructure.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 9 January at column 442.

Smuggling (Prosecutions)

Mr. Hill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each of the last five years, expressed as percentages, the number of successful prosecutions for smuggling in relation to the number of travellers using United Kingdom ports of entry.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available. Local Customs and Excise staff throughout the United Kingdom prosecute many minor smuggling offences. A central record of the number of successful prosecutions for smuggling is not kept for reasons of cost.

Hot Take-away Food (VAT)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the amount of revenue received from value added tax on hot take-away food.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 12 November to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) at column 89.

Development Land Tax (Claim Costs)

Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the total cost incurred by the Development Land Tax Office in pursuing claim No. DLT/14144/217/84; and if he will publish the breakdown on a Department by Department basis.

Mr. Moore: Details of the time spent by Inland Revenue staff on the cited case are not now available and no reliable estimate of cost can be given.

Customs and Excise Sales (Criteria)

Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria are used by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise when selling by public auction or tender goods which have been seized from countries outside the European Economic Community which have exceeded the legal quota or for other reasons.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is the policy of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to sell all seized goods which are considered to be in a saleable condition. Goods in excess of quota are sold subject to the condition that they are exported outside the European Community. Otherwise conditions are applied only if required by the nature of the goods, for example, the appropriate certificate or licence must be held for firearms and ammunition.

Taxation

Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing (a) the proportion in percentage terms, (b) the amount in current prices, and (c) the amount in constant 1984-85 prices of personal income taken by taxation and rates for the year 1985-86, taking account of any changes announced in his Budget statement and any previously announced changes, and for each of the years 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 for each level of average earnings, each category of taxpayer, and each category of taxation and rates, in the manner of the answer of 21 March 1984, Official Report, columns 480-86.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Nationalised Industries Legislation (Proposals)

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he took in preparing his document on nationalised industries legislation of the effect of the proposals contained therein (a) on the facilitation of privatisation, (b) on the promotion of commercial services or (c) on the promotion of the consumer interest.

Mr. Peter Rees: The proposals in the document are fully consistent with established Government policy in all these areas. As the document makes clear, the legislative proposals are intended to allow the privatisation of appropriate activities, and to encourage those industries remaining in the public sector to develop as successful, commercially oriented businesses. I believe this will be of significant benefit to their customers.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he proposes to publish a White Paper to present the proposals which are suggested in the recent document he issued on nationalised industry legislation.

Mr. Peter Rees: No final decisions have been taken on the timing and content of any legislation. It is premature, therefore, to consider whether a White Paper is appropriate.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in respect of which nationalised industries further legislation is required to allow privatisation to be effected.

Mr. Peter Rees: The proposed legislation will contain no powers to wind up existing corporations or to change their status. Full privatisation of an entire industry will therefore continue to require appropriate primary legislation.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the interests of the consumer will receive any clear and direct consideration before a nationalised industry is required to comply with any financial target set by his Department under the terms of his document on nationalised industry legislation.

Mr. Peter Rees: No decisions have been taken on the form and content of any legislation on financial targets. Successive Governments have considered financial targets to be a principal element of the framework within which nationalised industries operate. This framework is designed to promote the efficient allocation and use of resources to the benefit of all, including consumers.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the proposals contained in the document on nationalised industries legislation will assist the achievement of more commercial operations by the nationalised industries.

Mr. Peter Rees: The proposals in the consultation document are intended to result in clear guidelines within which those industries remaining in the public sector would have freedom to operate as successful, commercial businesses. I would expect clarity in these matters to benefit the industries themselves, their customers, and the nation as a whole.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what direct benefit he expects to accrue to the consumer if he implements the proposals contained in his suggested proposals for nationalised industries legislation.

Mr. Peter Rees: It is in the consumers' interest that public sector industries should operate as efficient and successful businesses. Our proposals are directed toward achieving that end.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response has so far been received in regard to the proposals contained in the document concerning nationalised industries legislation; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the views of consumers are obtained.

Mr. Peter Rees: Formal responses from 30 organisations and individuals have so far been received in the Treasury. These include comments from most nationalised industries and from a number of consumer bodies. The consultation document was freely available and each of the national nationalised industry consumer councils as well as the National Consumer Council has seen copies of it.

Spirits (Excise Duty)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue arose from excise duty on spirits in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what part of the total came from duty on Scotch whisky.

Mr. Lawson: Spirits duty receipts amounted to £1,702 million in 1983-84, of which it is estimated that a little under half was attributable to Scotch whisky.

Sterling Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the figures given in his written reply of 19 December, Official Report, column 188, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on the rate of exchange between the pound sterling and the control reference point of the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cash Limits

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of the cash limits set for 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Rees The cash limits on voted expenditure are listed in table A1 of the summary and guide to 1985-86 Supply Estimates (Cmnd 9450). The cash limits on local authority capital spending and other non-voted expenditure are given in the table.

*Non Voted Cash Limits 1985-86

Cash block	Department	Description of expenditure	Cash limit £ million
BOE	Bank of England	Bank of England administration costs in respect of note issue, exchange equalisation account and debt management	80·6
DOE/LA1	Department of the Environment	Capital expenditure in England by local authorities on roads and transport, housing, schools, further education and teacher training, personal social services and other environmental services	1,911·3
DOE/NT1	Department of the Environment	Capital expenditure in England by new towns on housing, roads, commercial and industrial investment and certain water services	*−14·4
DOE/HC1	Department of the Environment	Capital expenditure in England on housing financed through the Housing Corporation	605·0
DOE/UA1	Department of the Environment	External financing requirements of Urban Development Corporations, capital expenditure on the Urban Programme and derelict land reclamation	363·4
HO/LA1	Home Office	Capital expenditure by local authorities on police, courts and probation	123·5
NID 1	Northern Ireland Departments	Services analogous to Great Britain services covered by cash limits	2,189·0
SO/LA1	Scottish Office	Capital expenditure in Scotland by local authorities on roads and transport, water and sewerage, general services, urban programme, police and social work, schools, further education and teacher training	409·6
SO/LA2	Scottish Office	Capital expenditure in Scotland on housing by local authorities, new towns, the Scottish Special Housing Association and on schemes financed by the Housing Corporation, and industrial and commercial investment by new towns	416·9
WO/LA1	Welsh Office	Capital expenditure in Wales by local authorities, new towns and the Housing Corporation on roads and transport, housing, schools, further education and teacher training, personal social services, and other environmental services and by the Land Authority for Wales.	275·8
HO/MP1	Home Office	Expenditure by the Metropolitan Police on manpower, pay, pensions, premises, transport and other running costs	763·2
		Total	7123·9

* The cash limit is net of receipts, which are expected to exceed capital expenditure in 1985-86.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the payment to the European Communities of non-value added tax own resouces collected in February.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77, the Commission has invited member states to pay on 20 March instead of 19 April non-VAT own resources collected in February. These own resources consist of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties. The Government are complying with this request.

An amount not exceeding £62 million will be paid on 20 March; the payment of levies and duties on 19 April 1985 which is made directly from the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972 will be reduced by an appropriate amount. There will, therefore, be a transfer of expenditure from 1985-86 to 1984-85 but no net addition overall.

Civil List (Payments)

Mr. Wood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the total amounts payable under the Civil List Acts in the financial year 1985-86 and the total amounts payable to the royal family in the calendar years 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Lawson: The total amount proposed for the financial year 1985-86 is £5,327,000 comprising £5,017,000 payable directly from the Consolidated Fund and £310,000 as provision for the royal trustees from the Vote for Economic and Financial Administration: Treasury (Class XIII, Vote 4). These sums compare respectively with £5,117,000, £5,017,000 and £100,000 for the financial year 1984-85. The information on amounts payable to the royal family in the present and previous calendar year is as follows:

	1984 £	1985 £
The Queen's Civil List	3,850,000	3,976,200
HM Queen Elizabeth, The Queen Mother	334,400	345,300
HRH The Duke of Edinburgh	186,500	192,600
HRH The Princess Anne, Mrs Mark Phillips	116,200	120,000
HRH The Prince Andrew	20,000	20,000
HRH The Prince Edward	20,000	20,000
HRH The Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon	113,100	116,800
HRH Princess Alice, Duchess of Gloucester	45,800	47,300
HRH The Duke of Gloucester	91,000	94,000
HRH The Duke of Kent	123,000	127,000
HRH Princess Alexandra, Mrs Angus Ogilvy	117,000	120,900
TOTAL	5,017,000	5,180,100
Refunded by Her Majesty The Queen	331,000	341,900
	4,686,000	4,838,200

Note: The increase in total is 3·25 per cent.

Notes on payments to the Royal Family

1. These figures combine the sums payable directly from the Consolidated Fund with the supplements provided by the Royal Trustees. Strict cash limits criteria have been applied to the figures for 1985.

2. Sums of £20,000 a year are payable from the Consolidated Fund in respect of their royal highnesses the Prince Andrew and the Prince Edward from the dates when they attained the age of 18. (19 February 1978 and 10 March 1982 respectively). An order was made by Her Majesty under section 4 of the Civil List Act 1952 limiting the annual amount to be paid to the Prince Edward from 1 January 1983 to £8,000.

3. Her Majesty paid £331,000 into the Consolidated Fund in respect of payments made in 1984 to members of the royal family whose expenses are met under section 3 of the Civil List Act 1972: a similar payment of £341,900 will be made for 1985.

Married Women (Investment Income)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters and representations he has received on the taxation of a married woman's investment income.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985]: I receive an average of four to five letters a month on this subject. I have recently received 130 letters as a result of recent press coverage of the issue.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Pay)

19. Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children have been affected by strikes by the National Union of Teachers and the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers since 26 February.

Sir Keith Joseph: The 27,000 primary and secondary schools maintained by 104 local education authorities in England and Wales cater for about 8·3 million pupils and employ about 420,000 full-time teachers. Comprehensive information about the extent and effects of recent industrial action in these schools is not available centrally. It is however estimated that over 1 million children have been deprived of some lessons as a result of the selective strikes and other forms of disruptive action called by the NUT and the NAS/UWT. The Government deplore the fact that children's education is being disrupted in this way.

24. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

26. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

38. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute affecting some schools.

49. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about teachers' pay.

50. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further progress has been made towards resolving of the teachers' dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Members to the answers I have given today to my hon. Friends the Members for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) and for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold).

25. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much the real level of teachers' pay has increased since 1979 compared with average non-manual earnings.

Sir Keith Joseph: The cumulative total of pay rises awarded to school teachers since April 1979, up to and including April 1984, is 69 per cent. Teachers' average salaries during that period have increased by 79 per cent. (the higher increase in average salaries is explained by the effect of incremental drift in addition to annual pay rises). Over the same period the average weekly earnings (including overtime) of non-manual employees have increased by 86 per cent. while increases in the retail price index amount to 63 per cent.

30. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to discuss the teachers' industrial action with the employers' side of the Burnham committee; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I discussed the nature, extent and impact of the industrial action called by the National Union of Teachers and the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers when I met representatives of the Council of Local Education Authorities on 6 March. We noted the selective nature of the strikes and the varied impact of other forms of action in different parts of the country. I share the employers' deep concern that the education of children is being disrupted.

40. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from parents regarding strike action by teachers.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have received about 50 letters from parents drawing attention to the effects the industrial action by school teachers is having on their children's education. I am to meet representatives of the National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations about this on 20 March.

40. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the salary and conditions of service of teachers.

44. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the future pay and conditions of the teaching profession.

Sir Keith Joseph: Although discussions between the employers and the teacher associations on the school teachers' pay structure and related conditions of service ceased last December, I remain ready to receive and consider reform proposals. Were I to find any proposals which might be forthcoming negotiable, educationally acceptable and affordable, I would put them to my Cabinet colleagues for their collective consideration. I cannot predict the outcome. As the prospects of negotiating an early acceptable and affordable structure reform package seem increasingly difficult, I shall continue to consider other avenues for improving the professional development and performance of teachers and the management of the teacher force.

58. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to the Burnham further education joint working party on salary structure or the availability of additional resources to meet the cost of any proposals.

Sir Keith Joseph: My views on these matters have been made clear by my representatives in the various discussions and in a letter dated 7 February sent to the leader of the management panel of the Burnham Further Education Committee. I repeated the same views when I met the leader at his request on 15 February. The text of the letter is as follows:

As your talks on the FE pay structure have now got under way, I think it would be helpful if I set out where I stand.

When we had our useful talk last November, I made clear that the Government would welcome an effort to improve the flexibility and efficiency of the FE service and that I was very willing to see all options examined. But at the same time I asserted — and repeat this now — that I believe that these improvements should be and must be financed from savings arising from the greater efficiency of the service. Although the Audit Commission's investigation of local authority further and higher education is still to be finally written up, I understand that their report will be drawing attention to considerable scope which they believe exists for more cost-effective delivery of substantial parts of the service. Such efficiency savings as may be obtained should, I consider, be deployed to general benefit, including the customers of the service and those (including Central Government) who pay for it: productivity gains should not be allowed to accrue uniquely to teaching staff in the form of increased pay.

I recognise the difficult nature of the discussions ahead and I did not want to make life even more difficult by allowing there to be any uncertainty about my position.

Outer London Boroughs (School Inspectors)

20. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools cover schools in the outer London boroughs.

Sir Keith Joseph: Thirty-two of Her Majesty's inspectors have particular assignments in relation to schools in outer London boroughs, but inspections of these schools also involve other members of Her Majesty's Inspectorate, which is deployed nationally.

Higher Education

21. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to increase the proportion of non-standard entrants to higher education.

Mr. Brooke: Decisions about whom to admit to higher education courses are for individual institutions and their validating bodies. But the Government's projections of further demand assume continuing increases in the number of mature entrants to higher education, and the National Advisory Body's academic plans for the non-university sector are intended to promote part-time participation. Many students in these two overlapping categories are likely not to have the traditional entrance qualifications for higher education.

33. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was his Department's projected age participation rate and the actual rate for each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The Robbins report, published in 1963, stated that by 1980 about 17 per cent. of the age group will be entering full-time higher education. The 1972 White Paper "A Framework for Expansion" suggested that by about 1981 about 22 per cent. of the 18-year-old age group would enter higher education. The latest published projections and the actual figures are set out in the following table:

	1979 per cent.	1980 per cent.	1981 per cent.	1982 per cent.	1983 per cent.	1984 per cent.
Actuals (API)*	12·6	12·8	13·5	13·6	13·5	†13·8
1983 Projection:
RE99 (APR)					14·2	14·4
High variant					13·8	14·1
Low variant
1984 RE100 (API)						14·6
Variant X						13·3
Variant Y

* The age participation index (API) is defined as the number of young full-time and sandwich home initial entrants to higher education expressed as a percentage of half the total of 18 and 19-year-olds in the population. This measure has replaced the previously used age participation rate (APR) based solely upon 18-year-olds.

† Provisional estimate.

University Entrants (AS Levels)

22. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what effect he expects the introduction of AS levels to have on university entrance procedures.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend hopes to anounce the Government's decision about AS levels before Easter. The universities have indicated strong support for the proposed new examination, together with a willingness to give it full recognition in their admission processes.

Voluntary Student Unions

23. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is yet in a position to make a statement about his intentions regarding voluntary student unions.

Mr. Brooke: My answer to a question on 22 January, at column 846, from my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Merchant) made it clear that the provisions for automatic membership of student unions can be amended only at the initiative of the governing bodies of the institutions concerned or by legislation; and that my right hon. Friend has no present intention of introducing legislation for this purpose. The Government sympathise with the concern expressed by hon. Members about the activities of student unions; the discussions to which I have referred today in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) bear directly upon the issues that have generated this concern.

European Community Young Workers Exchange Programme

27. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any representations about specific disadvantages encountered by young British workers through lack of fluency in languages other than English from participation in the European Community young workers exchange programme.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. All projects in the third exchange programme, which begins this year, are eligible for financial support covering the cost of language tuition.

City and Guilds Institute

28. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to co-ordinate the curricula and examinations of the City and Guilds Institute with present examination boards.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have invited all the examining bodies concerned to contribute to the preparation of draft criteria for pre-vocational and vocationally oriented examination courses taken by pupils during the years of compulsory schooling. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Open University

29. Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is to be the role of the Open University in the education of people in the new technologies.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Open University will continue to have an important role to play in this area through its undergraduate and continuing education programmes, and in particular, through its professional, industrial and commercial updating courses.

32. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made a decision upon the future funding of the Open University; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Open University was informed of its grant for the academic year 1985 and indicated grants for 1986 and 1987 on 22 February. I informed the House of this on 27 February, at column 180, in response to questions from the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud) and my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway). Copies of the report and notification of grant have been placed in the Library.

39. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet the vice-chancellor of the Open University to discuss the first report of its visiting committee.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have no plans to do so.

47. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what part he envisages the Open University to have in his plans for higher education.

59. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Open University.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support he is giving to the Open University to ensure that resources in the area of education for handicapped and disabled persons are protected; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government value the opportunities provided by the Open University for the disabled. Decisions on the level of resources the university should devote to services for the disabled are for the university to make. The visiting committee recommended that the university should protect those services; the Government have played their part by responding positively to the visiting committee's recommendations in respect of alleviations to previously indicated grant levels.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the cuts in activity which will arise from a projected grant in 1987 of £53·30 million to the Open University; if he will reconsider his decision in this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The indicated grant for 1987 is £59·3 million. This grant was determined by the Government after consideration of the visiting committee's report on the university's plans to adjust to reduced levels of funding, and is in line with the committee's recommendation that the university should have an extra year to make the adjustment. The grant is indicated only, and is subject to revision in forthcoming public expenditure surveys. I have asked the visiting committee for a further report on the university's plans.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of graduates from the Open University since its inception; if he will give the current number of undergraduates; what is the number of students waiting to gain admission to the Open University; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Approximately 69,300 students have qualified for an Open University BA degree since its inception. The number of undergraduates in 1984 was 66,760. There were 17,600 applicants in 1984 for entry in 1985 who did not receive an offer of a place. The university operates a policy of offering places in the order of application, and those not offered a place in 1985 will be given first choice for a place in 1986.

Primary Schools

31. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy on primary school closures or amalgamations.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend's policies towards school closures, including amalgamations, are set out in circulars 2/80, 2/81 and 4/82, copies of which I sent my hon. Friend last November. Every proposal that comes to my right hon. Friend for decision, whether for primary or for secondary schools, is considered on its merits in the light of the circumstances of the case and of his published policies; the latter include the need to seize the educational and financial benefits to be gained by removing surplus school places from use.

Further Education College Lecturers

34. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in the talks on a new salary structure for further education college lecturers.

Sir Keith Joseph: Expressions of willingness to review pay and related matters were exchanged last November and repeated in February. Those were necessarily in general terms. I am not aware that matters have progressed beyond that first stage to the detailed examination of specific proposals.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

35. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied that schools will be able to provide candidates for the new General Certificate of Secondary Education examination with sufficient textbooks and other teaching material, particularly in English, in time for the first examination.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not foresee the need for wholesale replacement of existing materials. In most cases, the need will be, rather, for existing materials and the ways in which they are used to be adapted over time in the light of the new examination system and the other curricular developments which are constantly taking place. Successive RSG settlements have provided scope for local education authorities to improve their provision of school books and equipment in line with the priority that the Government have consistently accorded to this area. The 1985-86 settlement, for example, would allow most authorities, provided that other expenditure is firmly controlled, to immprove levels of provision per pupil compared to 1982-83, the latest year for which firm spending figures are available and one which showed a significant increase in levels of provision of books and equipment. Individual authorities will undoubtedly wish to take account of the changes in the national examination system when reaching decisions on the allocation of resources. The Government consider, too, that the manuals and videos which the Secondary Examinations Council and the examining groups are preparing for all secondary schools and colleges as part of the in-service training programme will make a major contribution to the necessary updating of teaching materials.

Children (Special Needs)

36. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available resources to implement fully the Education Act 1981 concerning the integration of children with special needs into ordinary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's expenditure plans for 1985-86 allow for an increase in the administrative costs in implementing the Act and for an increase in the number of educational psychologists employed by local authorities. It is for LEAs to decide how to deploy the resources available to them.

Adult Education

37. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about cuts in adult education provision in Inner London.

Sir Keith Joseph: Since 1 September 1984 the Department has received about 260 letters concerned solely or mainly with the implications of rate limitation for the provision of adult education in Inner London, and two petitions on this subject containing between them approximately 16,000 signatures.

Inner City Schools

41. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to remove some inner city schools from the maintained sector and to place them under alternative forms of control.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government have no plans in this area.

Special Education and Teacher Training

43. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to make any changes in the mandatory requirements for the qualifications of teachers concerned with special education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales are considering a recommendation by the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers that the mandatory requirement for teachers of classes of deaf, partially hearing or blind pupils to hold a specialist qualification should be removed. My right hon. Friends will announce their decision in due course.

46. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to reply to the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers' report on special education and teacher training.

48. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be replying to the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers' report on the training of teachers for children with learning difficulties.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales will announce their decisions in due course.

Science Expenditure

45. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the last two months about the Government's planned level of expenditure on science.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend has received about 50 letters.

Natural Environment Research Council

51. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the total sources of finance for the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Brooke: The sources of finance for the Natural Environment Research council for the financial year 1983-84 (the latest available figures) were as follows:

	£ million
1. Grant-in-aid from the Science Budget	62·5
2. Commissioned Research:
Department of Energy	8·3
Department of the Environment	4·8
Overseas Development Administration	2·9
Department of Trade & Industry	2·5
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	2·1
European Communities	0·7
Nature Conservancy Council	0·2

	£ million
Others	2·2

National Youth Advisory Council

52. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when it is proposed that the National Youth Advisory Council will be established.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) on 8 February, at column 723.

Teacher Assessment

53. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether it is his policy to seek to provide a link between teacher assessment and individual pay awards.

Sir Keith Joseph: I favour such a link in order to relate teachers' pay more directly to the quality of their performance. But teacher appraisal can serve a variety of other useful purposes supporting the professional development of teachers and the most effective management of the teacher force. If progress on appraisal in the context of pay negotiations is too slow—and all the evidence points that way—it is my duty to explore other possible ways of making progress.

Pupil Costs

54. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current cost per year of educating a child in a primary school for (a) the Inner London education authority and (b) Cornwall.

Mr. Dunn: The net cost of educating a primary school pupil in 1982-83, the latest year for which full data are available, was £1,144 in the Inner London education authority and £616 in Cornwall.

Further Education

55. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further action he proposes to take to encourage young people to stay at school beyond the statutory leaving age.

Sir Keith Joseph: The policies outlined in my speech at Sheffield last year are aimed at improving the quality of education offered by schools to pupils of all ages. These policies include improving the quality of the teaching force, seeking broad national agreement on the objectives of the school curriculum, introducing records of achievement and promoting better examination courses. The most effective encouragement to young people to remain in school after the period when attendance is compulsory is to ensure that what schools provide is relevant to pupils' needs and aspirations.

School Closures

56. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school closure requests from local education authorities he agreed to in 1982, 1983 and 1984; and how many he refused.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Approvals	Rejections
1982	214	26
1983	246	39
1984	213	20

Rate Support Grant Settlement

57. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from local education authorities about the level of the 1985-86 rate support grant settlement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend met elected members of the local authority associations last October to discuss the level of local authority expenditure on education in England to underlie the 1985-86 RSG settlement. This meeting was the culmination of detailed discussions between officials of the Department and of the local authority associations. In addition, the Department receives many letters from individual local authorities on expenditure issues in each financial year.

University Academic Staff

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the average amount, per person, paid out by universities to buy out academic staff; and how that compares with University Grants Committee guidelines;

(2) what was the total amount paid out by universities to buy out academic staff; and how that figure compares with forecast.

Mr. Brooke: The total amount paid by universities and reimbursed by the University Grants Committee in redundancy and premature retirement costs for academic staff totalled £93 million up to the end of January 1985. The average amount paid per person was £28,276. Both these figures exclude rebate paid by the Department of Employment under the statutory redundancy payments scheme. Expenditure has been reimbursed by the committee only where it was certified as being in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Government and the UGC. The costs are broadly in line with those originally forecast by the UGC. In addition to these costs the cost of actuarial strain on the universities' superannuation scheme is being met by additional employers' contributions to the scheme.

Solvent Misuse

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any evidence to suggest that solvents generally available in secondary schools are misused by pupils.

Mr. Dunn: No, but the Department has issued guidance to schools on the safe-keeping of such substances.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence is available to his Department concerning a correlation between the relevant income of parents of pupils entering the assisted places scheme and those pupils who did not formerly attend a maintained school.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not collected in the form required.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will indicate the criteria employed when assessing a request from a school participating in the assisted places scheme for relaxation of the 60 per cent. requirement;

(2) if he will list any requests for relaxation of the requirement that 60 per cent. of pupils winning an assisted place must come from the maintained sector which have been refused by him for each year since the introduction of the scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The 60 per cent. rule applies not to each intake but to the body of assisted pupils as a whole. To be granted a relaxation, a school must be able to demonstrate that it has made reasonable efforts to meet the rule or, in an individual case, that the relaxation is to meet particular hardship. No request has so far been refused. Where the difficulty is other than short-term, however, the school's quota of places is renegotiated.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is collected by his Department concerning the academic performance and university entrance record of pupils educated under the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The academic standards of participating schools are monitored, but details of the performance of individuals pupils are not collected.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the number of children winning an assisted place in each year of the scheme's operation in the following age groups and indicate the percentage of the total number of assisted places pupils each figure represents and the percentage change involved in each case (a) 11 to 13 years, (b) 13 to 16 years and (c) 16 to 18 years.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

	Age 11-13	Age 14-15	Sixth form	Total
School year 1981-82	3,660	—	525	4,185
Percentage	87		13	100
School year 1982-83	3,799	25	616	4,440
Percentage	85	1	14	100
School year 1983-84	4,093	54	745	4,892
Percentage	84	1	15	100
School year 1984-85	4,273	93	817	5,193
Percentage	82	2	16	100

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools participating in the assisted places scheme have been given increased quotas of pupils for each year since the introduction of the scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The redistribution of places to maximise the use of the available resources has led to increased quotas as follows:

School year	Number of schools
1982-83	32
1983-84	16
1984-85	17

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the number of cases, with the year of decision, in which he has rejected proposed fee increases by schools participating in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Dunn: In 1983, my right hon. Friend directed one school to charge a lower tuition fee for assisted pupils than it had proposed.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department as to the pupil-teacher ratio in secondary schools participating in the assisted places scheme;

(2) what studies are being undertaken by his Department to assess the proportion of (a) potential O-level candidates and (b) potential A-level candidates leaving the maintained sector for the assisted places scheme and the effects on the maintained schools so affected;

(3) how many places on the assisted places scheme remained unfilled in each year since the scheme's introduction for the following age-groups; and how many of the filled places represent cases where the 60 per cent. requirement has been relaxed in each case, for each of the following age groups: (a) 11 to 13 years, (b) 13 to 16 years and (c) 16 to 18 years;

(4) to what conclusions he has come concerning educational standards as a result of the assisted places scheme;

(5) how he estimates the marginal benefit accruing to a child educated under the assisted places scheme of the extra cost to his Department of so educating a child;

(6) what information he has as to the average income represented by fees paid by his Department under the assisted places scheme for those schools participating in the scheme for which the 60 per cent. requirement has been relaxed;

(7) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East of 11 March, Official Report, column 32, if he will now give for each year of the operation of the assisted places scheme the names of schools which have been granted dispensation from the 60 per cent. rule and the percentage of assisted places pupils formerly attending maintained schools in each case;

(8) if he will list in the Official Report the fee income to each school participating in the assisted places scheme as a result of the scheme; and what percentage of each school's fee income this represents for 1984-85;

(9) what criteria he uses to gauge how the quality of education available to pupils educated under the assisted places scheme exceeds that which is available to those pupils in the maintained sector.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the average fee increase at schools participating in the assisted places scheme in each year since its introduction.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

School Year Year	Average Annual fee £	Percentage increases over preceding year per cent.
1981-82	1,323	—
1982-83	1,467	11
1983-84	1,637	12
1984-85	1,730	6

Non-Maintained Schools (Charitable Status)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he plans to estimate and make available information on the revenue forgone as a consequence of the charitable status of the non-maintained sector of education.

Mr. Dunn: No.

Pupils (Statistics)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the proportions of pupils in comprehensive, secondary modern and grammar schools respectively, in each local education authority in 1979 and each subsequent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that a larger proportion of teachers receive specialist training related to the problems of drug misuse.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend announced on 27 February initiatives for the issue of a booklet to teachers on the problems of drug misuse and the preparation of suitable curriculum material for use by both teachers and teacher trainers in a drug education programme. In addition, those concerned with organising regional in-service training courses, under a programme supported by the Department, have been encouraged to give priority to courses concerned with drug misuse.

Teacher Training

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he intends for in-service teacher training; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget statement, additional resources amounting to £20 million in 1986-87 will be made available for in-service teacher training to promote developments across the curriculum of the kind related particularly to the technical and vocational education initiative. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Employment, Scotland and Wales and I are inviting the Manpower Services Commission to administer this training scheme. The scheme is planned to start in 1985-86 and the MSC is being asked to provide the £5 million necessary for this purpose from within its existing resources for that year.

The scheme will be an interim arrangement pending the introduction of a reformed system of funding for in-service teacher training. The Government have considered future arrangements for in-service teacher training in the light of a report last year by the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers. They share the view of the advisory committee that in-service teacher training needs to be planned more systematically. They consider that resources devoted to in-service training are not always being used to the best advantage and agree with the advisory committee that a radical change is needed in the funding and organisation of in-service training. Consultation on the committee's report has shown widespread support for the case for a new funding mechanism and for more systematic planning of in-service training. The Government have concluded that the most effective way of securing these improvements would be through the introduction of a new specific grant to support LEA expenditure on most aspects of in-service teacher training, including that expenditure currently supported through the in-service training pool as well as expenditure on national priority areas. They propose therefore to take an early opportunity to introduce legislation to extend existing powers to grant-aid in-service training. The new arrangements could not come into operation until the financial year 1987-88. The scheme for TVEI-related training announced today by my right hon. Friend will make a valuable contribution to in-service training in the interim period.

Engineering and Technology (Graduates)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to increase the output of graduates in engineering and technology; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has today announced that the Government are to mount a £43 million programme over the next three years for the provision within higher education institutions of additional places in engineering and technology.

The costs will be contained within existing expenditure programmes, with contributions from the Departments of Trade and Industry, Employment and Energy and from the Scottish and Welsh Offices, as well as from my Department's programme.

I am discussing with the University Grants Committee and others which institutions should benefit from this programme, and I hope to be able to announce soon those institutions that will admit additional students during 1985-86. Further announcements about later years will follow.

This programme marks a substantial response to requests from industry for an increased output of graduates in engineering and technology. Perceived industrial worth and cost effectiveness will therefore be important criteria in determining the allocation of the programme between institutions.

We shall be looking to industry to demonstrate the value it attaches to the programme by offering concrete support in various ways, along the lines proposed by the IT Skills Shortages Committee, and we shall be discussing further with employers' representatives how this can be assured.

This programme is a substantial addition to the initiative I announced in December 1982, for a programme to provide some 5,000 additional places in IT-related subjects, and to the programme costing £14 million over three years which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced in November 1984 to increase the output of engineers and technologists from the Scottish central institutions.

The combined effect of these programmes will be to provide a substantial further stimulus to the output of engineers and technologists and hence to the economy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled Persons

Mr. Haynes asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many registered disabled people are employed in the service of the House.

Mr. Beith: The total number of registered disabled persons employed among the staff of the House for whom the Commission is responsible is seven. Other registered disabled people work in the House, but their employment is the responsibility of other agencies, such as the Department of the Environment.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Free School Meals

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the proportion of schoolchildren in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools, expressed as a percentage, entitled to free school meals in each year since 1975, for each local education authority and for the country as a whole.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not available on the number of pupils entitled to a free school meal. The percentages of pupils taking free school meals in primary and secondary schools for the years 1978 to 1983 are given in the following tables. Information in this form is not available for the years 1975 to 1977.

Agricultural Courses

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all those educational establishments in England and Wales which maintain full-time courses in agriculture and related subjects and the number of places available at each institution for each year since 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: The information is not available in the form requested. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the National Consultative Committee for Agricultural Education's list of full-time and sandwich courses in agriculture, horticulture and forestry; full information on courses at all levels and in all modes of attendance, with enrolments from 1979, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Student Numbers

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures showing for 1982-83, 1983-84 and an estimate for 1984-85 of the numbers of (a) full-time and (b) part-time students in England.

Mr. Brooke: The numbers of students, from home and abroad, in universities and colleges of further and higher education in England were as follows:

	1982	1983
Full-time and sandwich	804,000	802,000
Part-time (including evening only)	1,256,000	1,348,000

Note: November-December of each year. Figures exclude the Open University and the University of Buckingham.

Statistics for 1984 are not yet available.

Independent Schools

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many independent special schools there are in the United Kingdom; how many of those passed his Department's inspection first time to be registered; and if the same criteria are used as in the inspection of state schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend's responsibilities extend to England only. The arrangements in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the respective Secretaries of State.

In England the terms "independent school" and "special school" refer to different types of institution. A special school is a school, whether maintained by a local education authority or not, which has been approved by my right hon. Friend as a special school under section 9(5) of the Education Act 1944. "Independent school" is defined in that Act in such a way as to exclude any school which is a special school.

It is an offence under section 70 of the Education Act 1944 to conduct an independent school which is not registered or provisionally registered. Registration on a provisional basis is granted automatically on receipt of the necessary details from a new independent school, pending a decision about final registration. Information about the number of inspections or visits to independent schools before the granting of final registration could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The requirements for registration to be made final, or for final registration to be allowed to continue, are set out in section 71 of the 1944 Act. In effect, a minimum standard of acceptability is sought in regard to premises, accommodation, instruction, and the suitability of the proprietor(s) and teachers.

I think, however, that the right hon. Member may have in mind the approval which certain independent schools may seek under the Education Act 1981. Under section 11 of that Act a local education authority may not place pupils with statements of special educational need at an independent school unless either the school is approved by my right hon. Friend as suitable for the admission of children for whom statements are maintained or he gives his consent in an individual case. So far 190 independent schools have sought approval under the 1981 Act; 91 have so far been approved, of which one third received approval after one visit by Her Majesty's inspectors. A number of schools have closed since seeking approval, including two which had secured it.

As was explained in the Department's circular No. 8/81, in order to secure approval under the 1981 Act independent schools are required to meet similar standards in respect of premises, qualified staff, education and care to those required in maintained and non-maintained special schools. They will also be required, as a condition of approval, to publish information about their facilities.

Steiner Schools

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it is his intention to exercise his powers under section 19(c) of the Education Act 1981 to make special provision for recognition of (a) teachers and (b) teacher training within Steiner schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: As the right hon. Member is aware, the advice given by the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers on the subject of teacher training for special education includes recommendations about the training provided by the Steiner movement. My right hon. Friend is considering this advice and will announce his decision as soon as possible.

Higher Education

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places were available in further and higher education for each of the last five years in (a) universities, (b) polytechnics and (c) other institutions; and how many and what percentage of the students concerned were studying for each category of qualification for which records are available.

Mr. Brooke: I shall reply to the hon. and learned Member as soon as possible.

National Child Development Study

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the future of the national child development study.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have no particular intentions at present towards the national child development study.

Cohort Studies (Funding)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the cohort studies currently receiving funding from his Department, giving the name of the research body, the name and subject of the research and the amount of funding from his Department in the current year and in total; when the funding is due to expire; and what plans he has to renew it in each case.

Sir Keith Joseph: None.

School Curriculum

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's Inspectorate's discussion paper on the school curriculum is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Her Majesty's Inspectorate has published today, in the "Curriculum Matters" series, its discussion paper "The Curriculum from 5 to 16". It raises, for comment not only by those professionally involved in education but also by the many others who have an interest in the work of the schools, some important issues about the ways in which a broad, balanced, relevant and differentiated curriculum can be provided for all pupils in the compulsory years. The paper is a further step towards establishing broad agreement on the objectives for the curriculum which is provided in our schools.

The purpose of the paper is to stimulate discussion: Her Majesty's inspectors will be glad to receive views on both the general approach and the detailed considerations set out in the paper. Views may differ on some of the difficult issues raised by the paper. For example, I am not myself satisfied that the discussion of the humanities and social studies gives sufficient prominence to the influence of ideas and beliefs nor to social or political systems, as distinct from impersonal environmental and economic forces. Differences of opinion such as this need to be tested in debate.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I hope that commentators will give particular attention to how broad principles on the content and organisation of the curriculum can best be translated, within the resources available, into reality, how the curiosity, originality and creative talents of pupils can be developed so as to enrich their achievements as individuals and as members of society making free but responsible choices, and to make them aware of the importance of ideas and beliefs in human activities; the range of personal qualities and competence needed to equip young people adequately for employment in a world which increasingly demands versatility and enterprise; and the means of securing appropriate differentiation for pupils of differing ability and aptitudes without detriment to the requirements of breadth, balance and relevance in the curriculum of all pupils.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places on the assisted places scheme remained unfilled in each year since the scheme's introduction for the following age-groups; and how many of the filled places represent cases where the 60 per cent. requirement has been relaxed in each case, for each of the following age groups: (a) 11 to 13 years, (b) 13 to 16 years and (c) 16 to 18 years.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1985, c. 480]: The numbers of unfilled assisted places in each year's quota were as follows:

Number of places

School year	11-15	VI form
1981-82	795	459
1982-83	793	380
1983-84	605	276
1984-85	459	215

Had the relaxations from the 60 per cent. rule not been given, the totals of unfilled places for each year would have been higher by the following amounts.

School year	Number of places
1981-82	164
1982-83	157
1983-84	134
1984-85	63

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passport and Customs Control

88. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider removing passport and customs control between Britain and other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Waddington: The possible reduction of passport and customs controls between member states of the European Community is at present under consideration within the Community. While we welcome measures designed to facilitate the passage across Community borders of passengers and goods meeting immigration and customs requirements, we are not prepared to agree to the abolition of all such controls.

Sexual Offences Bill

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Cheltenham of 8 February, Official Report, column 708, what were the main reservations contained in the comments made to his Department by the National Association of Probation Officers concerning the Sexual Offences Bill 1985; whether he has any plans to meet the association's officers to discuss these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In its letter of 22 January the National Association of Probation Officers expressed the view that the Bill would not reduce the nuisance caused by kerb crawling unless there was a large and persistent police presence; that it might lead to allegations of harassment from disadvantaged groups, and to police officers acting as agents provocateurs; that the police already had sufficient powers to deal with this nuisance, but had given little priority to it; that the level of maximum fines under the Bill would lead to increasing use of imprisonment for fine default; and that the way forward was to "decriminalise" prostitution. The association also expressed concern at the fact that provisions dealing with kerb crawling are contained in the same Bill as increases in the maximum penalties for serious sexual offences.

The association's views are at variance with those of the Criminal Law Revision Committee, on whose proposals the Bill is based, and I do not agree with them. I conveyed our views in a reply to the association on 12 February, of which a copy has been sent to my hon. Friend. The association did not request a meeting and we have no plans to arrange one.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received, and from whom, and what discussions he has had concerning the issue of kerb-crawling since the second reading of the Sexual Offences Bill 1985; whether he has any new proposals on this issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Since the second reading of the Sexual Offences Bill on 25 January we have received representations on the issue of kerb crawling from the Prosecuting Solicitors' Society of England and Wales, the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Law Society, the B3 Consultative Committee (Birmingham), Family and Youth Concern, the Wellclose Square Fund and the Joint Moseley and Balsall Heath Committee against Kerb Crawling. All of these organisations welcome the Bill although some offer detailed comments. I have discussed the Bill further with its promoter, my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) and the Home Office has had discussions with the Metropolitan police.

We are satisfied that the Bill, which is based entirely on the recommendations of the Criminal law Revision Committee, is the correct way to proceed and we have no new proposals on this issue.

Strip Searches

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of strip searches carried out on female prisoners in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the number of females involved;

(2) what is the number of strip searches carried out on female prisoners so far in 1985; and what is the number of females involved;

(3) what was the number of strip searches carried out in each female institution and the number of females involved, in each year since 1981 and so far this year;

(4) what was the number of strip searches carried out on teenage girl prisoners in 1984 and so far in 1985; and what was the number of girls involved.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not recorded centrally and its collection would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will explain the circumstances in which female prisoners are subject to strip searches.

Mr. Mellor: This information is contained in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 25 February, at columns 32-33, which referred equally to male and female prisoners.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not asked the Trades Union Congress to renominate a third person to fill the vacancy on the Equal Opportunities Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend wrote to the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress on 15 March to ask him to suggest a suitable candidate for appointment to the commission.

Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry by Assistant Chief Constable Peter Smith into the case of the late Hilda Murrell.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of West Mercia Constabulary that Mr. Smith's review of the investigation of this case, which he began on 4 March, is continuing. He will report to the chief constable in due course.

Crime (North-West England)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of his policies during the last year have proved successful in tackling crime in the north-west of England.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are many aspects of Home Office policies which are relevant to the prevention of crime and the detection and punishment of offenders. It would be invidious to single out any one in any individual area of the country.

Immigration Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will also send to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East his answer to the question of the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) Official Report, 12 March, column 83, when the immigration statistics referred to are available.

Mr. Waddington: In accordance with normal practice a copy of the letter to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) will be placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Hertfordshire

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the creation of new jobs in Hertfordshire;

(2) if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are committed to maintaining their economic policies, which are directed at holding down inflation and public borrowing while encouraging enterprise, flexibility and competitiveness in industry and the labour market. That is the only way to generate lasting jobs in Hertfordshire and elsewhere. In the meantime we are spending over £2 billion this year on a range of employment and training measures to help the unemployed.

In Hertfordshire nearly 1,300 are being helped by the job release and young workers schemes, and in Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire, nearly 1,400 people are benefiting from the community programme.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Employment what figures he has to indicate what improvements industry has made regarding industrial deafness.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no figures available which reliably show trends in industrial deafness. However, the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission and I are confident that the noise awareness campaign launched by the chairman and by my predecessor in October 1983 and the noise enforcement initiative launched by the director-general of the Health and Safety Executive in January 1984 are beginning to change the attitudes of designers, manufacturers, employers and workers towards the need to ensure effective protection of hearing against noise. The Health and Safety Executive is monitoring the effect of the enforcement initiative.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, with reference to the current review of the area manpower boards, he will seek to ensure that young people will be represented on the reconstituted boards.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the constitutional position of area manpower boards; and to what extent their constitutions or guides to practice permit co-opted members to vote.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1985, c. 95]: The constitution of area manpower boards is set out in the guide to the working of area manpower boards, a copy of which is available in the Library. Co-opted members do not normally have the right to vote, but exceptionally on certain boards some co-opted members are allowed to vote.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment which area manpower boards have no members who are from ethnic minorities; and what is the proportion of ethnic minorities in the general population in the area they serve.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1985, c. 95]: 36 of the 55 area manpower boards have no members from ethnic minorities. They are as follows. Up-to-date information for the purposes of the comparison requested is not available.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of area manpower boards are (a) black/other ethnic minority, (b) women and (c) young people under 25 years; and, in each case, how many are full members, co-opted members with voting rights, and co-opted members without voting rights; and what proportion these represent of total membership.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1985, c. 95]: Information on the age of area manpower board members is not available. The breakdown of area manpower board membership by black/ethnic minorities, and women is as follows (with proportions against total membership shown in brackets):

Day Release

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish figures showing for 1982-83, 1983-84 and an estimate for 1984-85, the numbers in England of (a) full-time trainees, (b) apprentices and (c) trainees on day release courses.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the following information is available:

(a) The 1983 labour force survey shows that there were about 280,000 people undertaking apprenticeship training in the spring of 1983.

(b) There were 409,000 students on day and block release courses in 1982-83 and 448,000 in 1983-84.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give reasons for the decision to increase the age of eligibility for the job release scheme from 62 to 64 years of age for men.

Mr. Alan Clark: These changes were first announced on 13 April 1983, at columns 430-31, and came into effect from 1 April 1984. We have made it clear on many occasions that the employment measures are reviewed regularly and changes made whenever necessary to ensure the most efficient and effective use of available resources.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a monthly breakdown of the numbers of people employed in the construction industry in the north-west of England in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of employess in employment by region are only available quarterly, the latest information relates to September 1984.

The following table gives, for the dates shown, the estimated number of employees in employment in the north-west region in the construction industry (division 5 of the 1980 standard industrial classification).

Nuclear Waste (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the function of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to nuclear waste of the description scheduled to be placed at Elstow, Bedfordshire, or at two other sites to be announced.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been asked to reply.

As my right hon. Friend told the House on 25 October 1983, at column 157, the sites will be subject to licensing by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Residential Homes (Payments)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many residents of the Little Haven nursing home, 24 Kingswood Avenue, Thornton Heath, Surrey, are receiving payment under regulation 9 (Payments to Residential Nursing Homes); and how much has been paid to residents in this nursing home in respect of board and lodging allowances in the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: Six residents at the Little Haven nursing home are receiving supplementary benefit under regulation 9 of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 at the rate appropriate to a nursing home. During the 12 months ending 5 March 1985 they received social security benefits (comprising supplementary benefit, retirement pension and attendance allowance) totalling approximately £63,000, of which approximately £53,000 was in respect of nursing home fees.

Mature Students

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he proposes to take to ensure that all mature students in full-time education are better informed of their right to make flat rate national insurance contributions so as to preserve their contributions record.

Mr. Whitney: A leaflet (FB23) "Going to College or University" containing information on the payment of national insurance contributions and social security benefits is currently available. Posters advertising this leaflet and advising students that copies can be obtained from their local social security office were distributed to colleges and universities during last year. We have no plans for further publicity at present.

Elderly People

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for each of the authorities which fall in the upper quartile of social services authorities when ranked by growth in the proportion of their population aged 75 years and above in the period 1979-80 to 1984-85, for that group as a whole and for all social services authorities in 1978-79, what was the total level of provision and the rate of provision per head of population aged 75 years and over for the following activities (a) local authority residential care for the elderly: total in care; (b) other residential care for the elderly: total in care, (c) day care for the elderly: total available services, (d) home helps: total number or whole-time equivalents, (e) home helps: total number of cases, (f) home helps: total number of hours service provided, and (g) meals: total number provided; what were the equivalent data in the most recent year for which such figures are available; and what were the rates of change over the whole period covered;

(2) which authorities fall in the upper quartile of social services authorities when ranked by growth in proportion of their population aged 75 years and above in the period 1979-80 to 1984-85;

(3) for each of the authorities which fall in the upper quartile of social services authorities when ranked by growth in the proportion of their population aged 75 years and above in the period 1979-80 to 1984-85, for the group as a whole and for all social services authorities, what was the rate of change in net real expenditure on personal social services in the years 1979-80, 1980-81, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85, providing outturn data where available and budget estimates where not.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available to answer these questions in the form specified, and it will take some time to analyse the available information. I shall place the detailed figures in the Library when the analysis is completed.

Pay

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much each percentage rise in the pay of (a) staff covered by the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine; (b) staff covered by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and (c) staff not covered by review bodies costs the National Health Service, distinguishing between costs falling on health authorities and those falling on other parts of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated cost of a 1 per cent. increase over 1984-85 National Health Service paybills is shown in the following table. No assumptions have been made about possible changes in the volume or composition of particular staff groups in 1985-86. The full year effect of the staged award made to doctors and dentists in 1984 and of the abolition of the national insurance surcharge have been taken into account. The costings include provision for NHS agency staff, employer's national insurance contributions, and superannuation.

Hospital and Community Health Services: Great Britain

	£ million
Medical and dental staff	11·27
Nurses, Midwives and the professions allied to medicine	39·58
Non review body staff	30·61
Total	81.46

For general medical and general dental practitioners a 1 per cent. increase in the 1984-85 pay bill for Great Britain is estimated to amount to some £9·5 million.

Ativan

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate which drugs on the limited list fulfil the clinical needs previously provided in Ativan.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Ativan is one of the branded versions of the generic drug Lorazepam, which is included in the selected list of drugs to remain available under the NHS.

Personal Social Services

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table setting out expenditure in 1982-83 and 1983-84 on wages and salaries, including pensions, for each of the main categories of personal social services staff.

Mr. John Patten: Comprehensive information on wages and salaries of social services staff is not collected centrally. The most detailed information relates to staff costs in sub-services, but does not identify particular grades of staff. Local authority personal social services employee costs (wages and salaries, including contributions to pensions schemes) for all authorities in England were:

	(£ million CASH) 1982-83	1983-84
Residential care	699	747
Home helps	241	266
Field workers	247	264
Other community support	296	333
Total	1,483	1,610

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for 1982-83 and 1983-84 showing the administrative costs of the personal social services, distinguishing if possible between costs borne by central Government and local government.

Mr. John Patten: Net current expenditure by English local authorities on personal social services administration amounted to £278 million in 1982-83 and £303 million in 1983-84. The figures cover management and administration both at headquarters and area offices. Expenditure on personal social services administration will form part of an authority's total expenditure for the purpose of determining the level of rate support grant but central government does not contribute specifically towards local authorities' personal social services administrative costs.

Speech Therapy (Departmental Advisor)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not appointed a new adviser on speech therapy services to his Department; and if he will be doing so in the near future.

Mr. John Patten: The appointment was announced on 19 March.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if health circulars provide for private patients receiving treatment within National Health Service facilities to be charged for the use of hospital, premises, facilities and equipment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health circulars about the level of charges for private patients in the National Health Service are issued annually. They contain determinations made under the powers in sections 65 and 66 of the National Health Service Act 1977 to set the charges paid by private patients in respect of accommodation and services at NHS hospitals.

Cohort Studies (Funding)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list in the Official Report the cohort studies currently receiving funding from his Department, giving the name of the research body, the name and subject of the research and the amount of funding from his Department in the current year and in total; when the funding is due to expire; and what plans he has to renew it in each case.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Castings

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what subsidies are available for the import of castings; to whom such subsidies are available; if he will assess the impact of the payment on domestic markets; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No United Kingdom subsidies are available for the import of castings into this country. Any evidence that imports are either being subsidised or sold at dumped prices (usually taken as being below the comparable exporting country's domestic prices), and that they are damaging industry in the Community, should be passed on to the Department of Trade and Industry's anti-dumping unit and the unit will be pleased to examine the situation.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for the expansion and future development of the information technology education centre programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has now achieved its target of establishing 175 ITeCs. We shall continue to provide pump-priming financial support to individual centres for a three-year period after their establishment. Following the expiry of this period it is intended that ITeCs will be in a position to become partially self-supporting as a result of their own commercial activities.

Oil Industry (Competition)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent studies his Department has conducted into the application of his competition policy to the oil industry and in particular petrol pricing; when last he referred this matter to either the Monopolies and Mergers Commission or the Office of Fair Trading; when last either body drew an aspect of this subject to his attention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The supply of petrol was last referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation in 1976 and the report was published in 1979. Since then, in line with the commission's recommendation, the Director General of Fair Trading has been keeping the petrol market under review and Ministers in this Department have been kept informed of developments. The director general has so far concluded that further action would not be justified.

Business Start-ups (Rural Areas)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific facility his Department has for granting financial and other help to young people in rural areas who wish to start their own businesses.

Mr. Trippier: Young people are, of course, eligible to apply for Government schemes of assistance for starting new businesses and can seek information and advice from my Department's small firms service. In rural areas assistance is also provided by the Development Commission's Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas. They can assist young people with negotiating loan facilities with banks or as a last resort provide loan finance themselves.

BL Cars

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the progress made by the BL board in carrying out its intention stated in September 1983 of seeking further private sector funds over the next two years within its mainstream business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Clothing, Footwear and Textiles

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he now has for Government investment in new technology for small firms in the clothing, footwear and textile industries.

Mr. Trippier: The full text of the Commission's decision rejecting the proposed investment scheme (CLOFT) for small firms in the clothing, footwear, knitting and textiles sector has been received only recently. My department is currently studying the details and is arranging discussions with representatives of the industries concerned to consider the situation.

Package Holidays

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received alleging that restrictions imposed by holiday tour companies which preclude Ilkeston Co-operative Society from marketing package holidays at discounted prices may be in breach of the Competition Act 1980; what action he proposes to take in response to such representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend has not received any such representations recently. However, the supply of package holidays by tour operators through travel agents and the related question of discounts are currently being investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission following a monopoly reference made by the Director General of Fair Trading under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The Competition Act 1980 does not of itself make practices unlawful, but gives the director general powers to conduct an investigation following which he may consider whether to make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Information Technology Industry

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers employed in each sector of the information technology industry, namely, office machinery, electronic data processing equipment, telecommunications equipment, radio and electronic capital goods, electronic components and sub-assemblies and electronic consumer goods, for each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985, c. 346]: The information on employment is not available at the detailed industry level requested. The following table gives the information which is available:

Annual average employment

thousands

	*1979	*1980	*1981	1982	1983	‡1984

* Data for 1979, 1980 and 1981 are available only at aggregate level. The figures shown include those for employment in the "Electrical instruments and control systems" and "Records and Tapes" industries. These sectors cannot be seperated from the industries defined as information technology.

† These figures include employment in the "Records and Tapes" industry which are not seperately identifiable.

PRIME MINISTER

Housing Costs

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister if she will publish figures showing the total United Kingdom costs of Government support for housing costs in each year since 1979-80, distinguishing between each of the following: (a) rent rebates and allowances with supplementary benefit, (b) rates rebates with supplementary benefit, (c) mortgage interest payments with supplementary benefit, (d) rent rebates and rent allowances for working householders, (e) rate rebates for working householders, (f) mortgage interest tax relief including option mortgages, (g) improvement grants and (h) rent subsidies.

The Prime Minister: The following are the available estimates of central and local government expenditure in support of housing in the United Kingdom.

£ million

† Rebates and allowances to non-recipients of supplementary benefit. Including rate rebates under provisions of the Rating and Disabled Persons Act.

‡ Tax relief to 1982-83 and subsequently MIRAS; including option mortgage scheme.

‖ Grants paid to private owners and tenants.

¶ Including subsidies to Scottish Special Housing Association and Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

VJ Day

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister what arrangements Her Majesty's Government envisage for the celebration of the 40th anniversary of VJ Day; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 14 February, at column 230, and that of my hon. Friend for Pendle (Mr. Lee) on 11 March, at column 57, about our plans for the commemoration of the 40th anniversary of the end of the second world war in all theatres.

Treasury and Civil Service Committee (Report)

Mr. Dorrell asked the Prime Minister when the Government's response to the eighth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee is to be published.

The Prime Minister: The Government's response to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee's eighth report is published today as Cmnd. 9465 and copies are available in the House of Commons library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will provide for each of the common agricultural policy products for which there is a guarantee threshold, a table showing the level of the threshold, the price and other adjustments which have to be made at each level of over-production, and the quantities actually produced in the European Economic Community and in the United Kingdom in 1967-68 to 1969-70 and each year since 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested on the application of guarantee thresholds and similar measures is set out in the table.

Estimates of production for most of these commodities are available on the EROSTAT computer database (CRONOS), access to which may be gained through the Library of the House. In the case of cotton, for which a common regime was introduced in 1981, statistics of Community production are available in the Commission's 1984 report on "The Agricultural Situation in the Community", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. For isoglucose figures relating to the period from 1979-80 are as follows:

Estimated production of isoglucose

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the principal products, including milk, gross expenditure under the guarantee section of the common agricultural policy on each unit of output in the European Economic Community as an average in each of the past three years, and the estimate used in the European Economic Community budget in the current year, together with the amount, if any, collected in penalty payments for overproduction.

Mr. MacGregor: The information on expenditure under the guarantee section of the EAGGF for the years 1981 to 1983 together with provisional data for 1984 and the draft budget for 1985 is given in table 43 of the report on the "Agricultural Situation in the Community 1984", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The amounts of milk levies so far collected, and future forecasts are recorded in the report as "cost milk producers". The supplementary levy in the milk sector has not yet been collected.

The most recent information of production for the years 1981 to 1983 is available from the Eurostat computer data (Cronos), which source is available through the Library of the House. The latest estimates of production for 1984 were given in my reply of 4 March 1985 to the hon. Member.

Farm Review

Miss Maynard asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a breakdown of the farm review given in Cmnd. 9423 on either a regional or county basis.

Mr. MacGregor: Statistical data contained in the "Annual Review White Paper" (Cmnd. 9423) for crop areas and livestock numbers is shown on a county basis in "Agricultural Statistics United Kingdom 1983", available in the Library of the House. A breakdown of other data included in the White Paper on a regional or county basis is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Milk and Milk Products

Mrs. Kellett-Bowman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to implement article 3 of the European Community regulation 857/84 to enable a farmer who has adopted a milk production development plan to have a special reference quantity taking account of the milk and milk products quantities provided for in the plan.

Mr. MacGregor: This provision has been implemented by paragraphs 8 to 13 of schedule 1 and paragraphs 7 to 13 of schedule 2 to the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1984.

Live Animal Exports (Port Facilities)

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will examine ways of improving the facilities at ports for animals exported live from the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: I see no need for such an examination. Under the Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981, all food animals exported from Great Britain must, immediately before their international transport, be rested for at least 10 hours in lairage premises within a reasonable distance of the port of embarkation. The animals must be offered suitable food and water during this period, and the premises and the facilities provided must be officially approved as meeting detailed requirements.

The animals may only be exported if, on inspection in the lairage, one of my veterinary staff has certified them as fit to travel. Loading for international transport must take place in the presence of an official.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Rate Capping)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities with social services responsibilities are being rate capped in 1985-86.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following rate limited authorities have a statutory responsibility to provide social services in their areas:

London Borough of Brent
London Borough of Camden
London Borough of Greenwich
London Borough of Hackney
London Borough of Haringey
London Borough of Islington
London Borough of Lambeth
London Borough of Lewisham
London Borough of Southwark
City of Sheffield Metropolitan Council

Disabled Persons (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many registered disabled people are employed by his Department in the Palace of Westminister.

Sir George Young: My Department employs 13 registered disabled staff in the Palace of Westminster in the Property Services Agency.

Block Grant

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the resources discount given to local authorities in Greater London for purposes of block grant distribution in each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86; and what were the comparable discounts given under the previous distribution arrangements for each year from 1974-75 to 1980-81.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Figures for the years 1981-82 to 1985-86 are as follows:

	Inner London per cent.	Outer London per cent.
1981-82	23·5	10·6
1982-83	29·6	17·2
1983-84	29·6	17·2
1984-85	29·6	17·2
1985-86	29·6	17·2

Figures on a comparable basis for years 1974-75 to 1980-81 are not available.

Frogs (Licences)

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each English county, the number of licences which have been issued for the sale of frogs caught in the wild and the numbers of frogs covered by the licences issued in each county; and, in the case of Cornwall, what steps his Department has taken to ensure that the wild population of frogs in that county is able to sustain the collection of the numbers which have been allowed to be sold under licence.

Mr. Waldegrave: To date, 22 dealers and pet shops throughout Great Britain have been licensed to trade in frogs. Such frogs may, however, have been obtained from outside the county in which they are sold. Three of the licensed dealers are based in Cornwall. Licences issued by my Department do not impose any limitation on the number of animals which may be sold. The situation is being closely monitored by my Department and the Nature Conservancy Council, which is satisfied that the extent of trade in the common frog is not so extensive as to constitute a threat to the species.

Housing (North-West)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the total size and quality of the housing stock in the north-west of England in the last three years.

Sir George Young: Estimates for the north-west region based on information provided in local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns on dwellings which are unfit, lack amenities or in need of renovation are as follows, with the Department's own estimates of the total housing stock.

Housing Stock: North West Region

		Thousand dwellings
	December 1981	December 1982	December 1983
Total stock	2,470	2,478	2,489
Defective dwellings	April 1982	April 1983	April 1984
Unfit	73	69	80
Fit, lacking amenities	125	111	93
Non-substandard in need of renovation*	364	367	376

* Not unfit or lacking amenities, but needing major capital expenditure of more than £2,500 (1982) or £3,000 (1983 and 1984).

Numbers reported by local authorities are not necessarily comparable as their criteria differ and in total their reports are not consistent with estimates of English house conditions survey of 1981.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has concerning the number of starts of new council houses in the north-west of England in each of the months for the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give a monthly breakdown of new house completions in the north-west of England in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(3) if he will give a monthly breakdown of the numbers of new housing starts in the north-west of England in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: Information is readily available only on a quarterly basis and is published in table 1.3 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 1", which is available in the Library. Figures for the fourth quarter 1982 to the provisional fourth quarter 1984 will be an issue number 20 to be published tomorrow; figures for the first quarter of 1982 appeared most recently in issue No. 17.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the numbers of houses which have become uninhabitable or been demolished in the north-west of England in each of the months for the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: Information on slum clearance and other losses is collected on a financial year basis from local authorities. Following are estimates for the region:

Dwellings demolished or otherwise lost to the Housing stock: North-West Region

	Thousands
1981-82	10
1982-83	8
1983-84*	3

* Provisional

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of people on council house waiting lists in each of the months for the last three years for which figures are available in the north-west of England.

Sir George Young: The Department does not collect information on council housing waiting lists.

Homes Insulation Scheme

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if those local authorities which underspend their allocation of grant under the homes insulation scheme in the current financial year will be able to divert such unspent funds to other purposes.

Sir George Young: Local authorities may use their homes insulation scheme allocation for other purposes if it is not required for grants under the Homes Insulation Act 1978. Under section 2(1) of the 1978 Act, expenditure on such grants is financed in full by the Department, but this provision does not apply to any part of the allocation used to cover expenditure on other services.

Mr. T. A. Peacock (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Erewash may expect a reply from the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Macfarlane), to his letter of 19 November 1984 and a reminder letter of 25 January regarding the dispute between Mr. T. A. Peacock and the Ice Hockey Association.

Mr. Macfarlane: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 19 November on 18 December. I shall send him a copy.

Homeless Persons (North-West)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of homeless people in the north-west of England in each of the months for the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: Information on homelessness is available only each half-year. The estimated numbers of households accepted as homeless in the north-west of England are as follows:

Number of households accepted as homeless

Period	Number
2nd half 1982	4,250
1st half 1983	4,250
2nd half 1983	4,700
1st half 1984	4,850

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Magnox reactors will require decommissioning; and what method the industry proposes to use to handle the waste involved.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been asked to reply.

The earliest Magnox stations in England and Wales are expected to remain operational at least until the early 1990s. Decommissioning of these stations will not give rise to highly active waste. Most of the radioactivity will be contained in the spent fuel which will be sent for reprocessing in the normal way. The procedures used in decommissioning will ensure that all waste materials are transported and disposed of in a properly controlled manner in accordance with authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Departmental Offices (Marsham Street)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what he attributes the process of carbonation in his Department's main office building and the spalling of concrete with rust staining; whether calcium chloride was used as an additive to the concrete and if tests have been carried out on the level of chlorides in the concrete; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985, c. 342]: Carbonation of the concrete at Marsham Street is attributed to a chemical reaction with acidic solutions of atmospheric gases, notably carbon dioxide resulting in corrosion of the steel reinforcement. Calcium chloride was not used as an additive to the concrete and tests carried out have revealed that the chloride content of the concrete is satisfactorily low.

WALES

Road Building (Contracts)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the 10 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road construction contracts in the last three years, giving for each contractor the total value of the contracts received.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The list is as follows:

	Total value of contracts £
1. John Laing Construction Limited	41,106,078
2. Cementation Construction Limited	*38,064,561
3. Costain Civil Engineering Limited	*38,064,561
4. Fairclough Civil Engineering Limited	11,496,797
5. Dowsett Engineering Construction Limited	10,173,868
6. Davies Middleton and Davies	7,014,029
7. Christiani and Neilson Limited	6,617,422
8. Maenex Construction Company Limited	1,407,805
9. Glyn Davies Kidwelly Limited	835,814
10. Mid Glamorgan Civil Engineering	618,918

* In Joint Venture.

Council House Sales (Capital Receipts)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the capital receipts from the sale of council houses was used by each Welsh district authority to supplement its capital spending in 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 at constant 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. Robert Magilton (Lords Tribunal Application)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the application for compensation to the Northern Ireland Lands Tribunal, which was acknowledged on 20 February 1978, reference number LD-4-1977, by Mr. Robert Magilton of 87 Mountain road, Whitespots, Newtownards, will receive attention; and when the letters of 6 February and 25 February to the Lands Tribunal by the right hon. Member for Strangford will be acknowledged.

Dr. Boyson: I understand that the registrar of the Northern Ireland Lands Tribunal wrote to the right hon. Gentleman on 14 March expressing regret for the delay and indicating that this application has been listed for call over on Friday 29 March, when a hearing date can be fixed.

ENERGY

Waddilove Report

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to give the Government's response to the Waddilove report on subsidence due to the mining of coal.

Mr. David Hunt: Careful and urgent consideration is being given to the Waddilove committee's recommendations, but work has inevitably been impeded by the recent disruptive action in the industry. A response will be given as soon as possible.

Sellafield (Solid Waste)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether any of the plutonium contained in solid wastes at Sellafield and intermediate level wastes appear in the table giving the allocation of plutonium produced in Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board Magnox reactors given in the answer of 25 January, Official Report, columns 545-47.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, pursuant to his reply of 15 March, Official Report, column 301, regarding the origin of plutonium in solid waste at Sellafield, he will give the period to which his answer refers and the weights involved;

(2) if he will give information on the amount of plutonium contained in solid waste at Sellafield for the period 1976 to 1984, on the same basis as given on page 140 of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's sixth report, Cmnd. 6618.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my answer on 15 March 1985.

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much plutonium now stored at Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board Magnox stations is contained in intermediate level wastes, other than spent fuel elements, stored within nuclear reactors, as defined by the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution on page 66 of its sixth report, Cmnd. 6618.

Mr. Goodlad: Only trace amounts of plutonium are contained in the intermediate level wastes which are stored at the Magnox stations.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has reached agreement with the Central Electricity Generating Board to transfer to the board his right to plutonium from the Dungeness B nuclear power station.

Mr. Peter Walker: Anglesey Aluminium Ltd. (AAM) would have had rights to a share in the plutonium expected to be produced from the Dungeness B nuclear power station in the late 1990s because it contributed to the captial costs of the station. Under the Aluminium Industry (Anglesey Project) Scheme 1968 the then Government purchased these rights from the company by undertaking to make a series of quarterly payments running from 1971 to 2001.

I have now reached agreement with the CEGB to transfer to it the rights to plutonium from Dungeness B which I inherited as a result of this purchase. Plutonium from Dungeness B, like that from all other CEGB nuclear power stations, will now be fully owned and controlled by the CEGB, subject to the safeguards and other arrangements under the Euratom treaty. In consideration of this transfer the board will pay my Department

£1,184,000, and for the year 1984-85 only has taken over my Department's payments of £156,752 to AAM, giving a total credit to my Department of £1,340,752. My Department will continue to make payments to AAM under the 1968 scheme for years after 1984-85.

The total payment of £1,340,752 is broadly equivalent to the discounted present value of this plutonium, though the range of uncertainty about value is wide. The value is, however, substantially less than was expected when the purchase from AAM was made in 1968. Assumptions which have proved inaccurate were then made about the demand for plutonium for use in fast reactors, and about the date of commissioning of Dungeness B. Both demand for plutonium and the amount produced during the 30-year life of the agreement will now be less. As a result, the payments already made to AAM totalling some £2 million will be treated as a constructive loss in the accounts of my Department.

Energy Ministers Council

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Communities Council of Energy Ministers on 15 March.

Mr. Goodlad: I represented the United Kingdom at the Energy Ministers Council on 15 March.

The Council discussed the present state of the European refining industry, following refinery closures by companies to bring capacity more into line with demand, and in the light of an expected increase in the volume of exports of refined oil products from middle east countries. The Council agreed that the Commission should continue to keep a careful watch on the situation. The Commission is to consult other major consuming countries in order to ensure that additional imports are absorbed into the market in an orderly way.

A first discussion was held on the Commission's proposal for a further five-year regulation to provide support for energy demonstration projects. A number of countries, including the United Kingdom, felt that the Commission's proposal to spend 700 mecu over five years were over-ambitious.

The Council adopted a resolution designed to promote progress in using energy more efficiently in buildings. Energy pricing and a draft directive on substitute fuels were also briefly discussed.

THE ARTS

North-West England (Provision)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will list the sucesses of his Department in providing for the arts in the north-west of England in the last year.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

M2

Mr. Crouch asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the enlargement of the M2 into a three-lane motorway.

Mrs. Chalker: We are at present undertaking a study of the possible need for more capacity on the M2 between junctions 1 and 3. Subject to the outcome, the existing M2 and the M20 with the new section from Maidstone to Ashford should provide for traffic between London, the M25 and the Kent coast beyond the end of the century.

Motorways (Roadworks)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the dates of disruption to M1 and M6 motorways due to roadworks since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that the information sought is not available.

Maintenance is necessary to deal with wear and tear and to keep roads safe. So on these two routes during any specific period, some maintenance work may have to be carried out with some loss of road capacity.

Woolwich Free Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what bodies or organisations have been consulted about the future ownership and operation of the Woolwich free ferry after the abolition of the Greater London council; and what responses they have made.

Mrs. Chalker: Last July my Department issued a consultation paper entitled "Reallocation of Transport Responsibilities in London Following Abolition of the GLC." A copy was sent to the hon. Member. This invited views from all London borough councils on a range of points, including the appropriate transfer of responsibility for the Woolwich ferry. The two boroughs between whose areas the ferry operates offered no comments at all.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the future arrangements for the ownership and operation of the Woolwich free ferry after the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mrs. Chalker: In good time for April 1986.

Lowland Airports, Scotland

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his findings on the review of Scotland's lowland airports policy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend hopes to be able to announce a decision in the next few weeks.

British Rail (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Disability Alliance, the Royal National Institute for the Blind and the National Federation of the Blind about the proposed changes in British Rail's fare structure and in the discounts available to disabled holders of railcards; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Disability Alliance has sent me a copy of its letter of 4 March to the chairman of BR about changes in fare discounts for all railcard holders to be introduced from 12 May. I will be replying shortly.

I expect the board to provide services which are good value for money at acceptable fares and charges. Within this objective, responsibility for determining fares structures and levels rests with the board. I welcome the concern the board has shown and the measures it has taken for disabled people, including the original introduction of discounted rail fares for this group of travellers. The board's view is that overall the holders of railcards, which include disabled people, should not be worse off as a result of the changes in the fares discounts.

Helicopter Accident (Isles of Scilly)

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the report on the British Airways helicopter accident near the Isles of Scilly will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The report on this tragic accident will be published by HMSO on 21 March 1985. The wreckage was recovered from the seabed and transported to the accidents investigation branch (AIB) facilities at Farnborough, where an extremely detailed examination failed to reveal any technical faults that could have caused the accident. The report contains eight safety recommendations. Seven have been accepted by the Civil Aviation Authority and are being processed by it.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

El Salvador

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on British aid to El Salvador in the event of a resolution of the internal conflict in that country.

Mr. Raison: Following the visit to the United Kingdom last summer by President Duarte, Her Majesty's Government agreed to resume a modest programme of technical cooperation to El Salvador. It would be premature to speculate what effect a resolution of internal conflict in El Salvador might have on future British aid.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Budgetary Discipline

75. Mr. Terry Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals are under consideration at the Foreign Affairs Council concerning the financing of Community expenditure in 1985.

77. Mr. Bob Edwards asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held at the Foreign Affairs Council regarding the 1985 European Economic Community budget.

85. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government intend to seek parliamentary approval for a further loan to the European Economic Community.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Discussions are continuing today in Brussels on how to ensure the implementation of the United Kingdom's abatement; on the timing of new own resources and on the financing of the 1985 budget.

86. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what criteria Her Majesty's Government intend to judge the success of the recently adopted proposals on European Economic Community budgetary discipline.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The success of the budgetary discipline arrangements must be judged by whether they help achieve the control of Community expenditure, particularly agricultural expenditure, for which they were designed.

Community Reforms

81. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made in implementing the European Economic Community reform proposals agreed at the Fontainebleu summit.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: A text on budgetary discipline was agreed by the Council last December and will apply to decisions taken this year concerning expenditure in 1986. Discussion is continuing on the texts necessary to implement the Fontainebleu agreement on budgetary imbalances and own resources. The work of the Committee on Institutional Affairs is nearly completed and its report, together with part of the People's Europe Committee's final report, will be submitted to the European Council on 29 and 30 March.

Spain and Portugal (Accession)

82. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the discussions over the accession of Spain and Portugal to the European Economic Community.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Work has been continuing in the Community since the Foreign Affairs Council on 28 February to prepare for the extended Foreign Affairs Council and negotiating session with Spain and Portugal which began on Sunday. These meetings are still in progress. My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) will be making a statement tomorrow on the outcome.

84. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the effect of the accession of Spain and Portugal on the spending priorities of the European Economic Community.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Council will decide on spending priorities in the enlarged Community taking account of available resources and the provisions of the agreement on budget discipline.

Voting Procedures

83. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the issue of extended majority voting will next be discussed by the Council of Ministers.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West (Sir A. Meyer).

Central America

87. Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held in the Foreign Afairs Council concerning the situation in Central America.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The situation in Central America was last discussed by Ministers in political co-operation at the meeting in Rome on 12 February. It was agreed to send a message of support to the summit meeting of the Contadora Group which will now take place on 21-22 March. A copy of the message has been deposited in the Library of the House. Economic and development co-operation between the Community and Central America was also discussed briefly at the Foreign Affairs Council on 28-29 January.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Lobbying

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Christchurch on 21 February, Official Report, column 557, after the Budget, he will prepare a dossier on the extent and practice of lobbying, with particular reference to its relationship to the instigation of an autumn statement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: There has been considerable lobbying about taxation matters prior to this year's Budget. The Government consider all representations made to them and take account of them in formulating their Budget.

Customs and Excise (Staff)

Mr. Hill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each of the last five years the average daily ratio of Customs staff on duty to the numbers of travellers entering the United Kingdom through ports of entry.

Mr. Hayhoe: The average daily ratio of uniformed customs preventive staff on duty to the number of travellers entering the United Kingdom for each of the last five years ending 31 March was as follows:

	Ratio
1980	1:56
1981	1:61
1982	1:66
1983	1:70
1984	1:74

Preventive staff control the movements of both passengers and freight.

VAT (Evasion)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations have been made on the evasion of the payment of value added tax by hot pie sellers.

Mr. Hayhoe: Customs and Excise investigates all cases where there is evidence of evasion, or that VAT is not otherwise being accounted for correctly, which are reported to it or which come to light during the course of routine control visits.

EC (Finances)

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest cash flow position of the European Community.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Commission estimates a fluctuating cash deficit during this month which may reach about 550 mecu (£314 million) by the end of March, after the payment of non-VAT own resources collected in February. Consequently the Commission is having recourse to the overdraft facility available under article 12(2) of Regulation 2891/77. This facility does not add to the total own resources available to the Community in 1985.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the maximum rate of increase in expenditure other than that necessarily resulting from the treaty fixed by the European Economic Community under article 203 for each year since 1972.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Sterling Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the figures given in his written reply of 19 December, Official Report, column 188, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on the rate of exchange between the pound sterling and the control reference point of the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1985, c. 466]; The information requested is as follows:

*Sterling/European Currency Unit (ECU) Exchange Rate (end-month rates): percentage change from notional central rate

	Percentage change
December 1984	−4·84
January 1985	−6·34
February 1985	−4·86
18 March 1985	−3·22

* The relevant notional central rate for sterling against the ECU is 1 ECU=£0·585992.

Extra-Statutory Concessions

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish a list of extra-statutory concessions which he has introduced since May 1979;

(2) whether he will consolidate all Inland Revenue extra-statutory concessions into one publication, specifying in each case the fiscal year in which each concession was introduced.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: Inland Revenue extra-statutory concessions are published in booklet IR1, the current version of which became available in December 1980. Annual supplements have been issued covering changes up to 2 August 1983. A revised version of the booklet incorporating the amendments to date is planned for later this year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Contadora Process

3. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other European Economic Community countries about the Contadora process.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I discuss the situation in central America regularly with my European colleagues.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the Contadora peace process; and if Her Majesty's Government are prepared to contribute to any peace-keeping force that might result from a peace agreement.

Mr. Luce: We and our European Community partners have given firm and consistent support to the efforts of the Contadora Group. We gave practical expression to this support by the meeting of European and regional Foreign Ministers at San Jose in September, attended by my right hon. and learned Friend. It is premature to speculate about our position before any agreement is reached.

Geneva Arms Talks

7. Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Geneva talks.

22. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Geneva arms talks.

24. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Geneva arms talks.

35. Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Geneva arms reduction talks.

65. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United States-Soviet disarmament talks, which opened in Geneva on 12 March.

Mr. Luce: We warmly welcome the beginning of United States-Soviet talks in Geneva on nuclear and space weapons. They are likely to be long and complex, but the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation is united in its support of American efforts to achieve the mutually agreed objective of preventing an arms race in space and terminating the arms race on earth. During her visit last week to Moscow my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made this clear to Mr. Gorbachev.

23. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will assess the implications for Britain arising from the Geneva talks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Geneva talks are of paramount importance for the security of all nations. Their aim is to maintain deterrence and enhance security with reduced levels of offensive systems on both sides.

26. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect European support for the strategic defence initiative will have on the Geneva arms reduction talks.

Mr. Luce: Close consultation between the United States and its European Allies is an essential prerequisite to the success of the talks. We fully support the strategic defence initiative research, which is permitted under international agreements. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and President Reagan reaffirmed last month, SDI-related deployment would have to be the subject of negotiations with the Soviet Union. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made this clear during her meeting with Mr. Gorbachev last week.

59. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation he has had with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation partners about the stance of the United States Administration in the Geneva arms talks.

Mr. Luce: We are engaged in close and constant consultations with all our allies, in particular the United States, both bilaterally and multilaterally on these talks. The three American negotiators to the Geneva talks briefed the North Atlantic Council on the American negotiating position on 11 March.

60. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for progress towards multilateral disarmament in the light of the round of talks, which opened in Geneva on 12 March.

Mr. Luce: We hope that the opening of United States-Soviet talks will encourage multilateral discussions elsewhere. These include the Geneva conference on disarmament, and in particular, the negotiations for a total ban on chemical weapons, the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe (CDE), which is seeking measures to reduce tension in Europe through greater openness about military activities and the mutual and balanced force reductions (MBFR) talks in Vienna, where NATO and Warsaw pact countries are negotiating reductions in conventional forces in central Europe.

El Salvador

9. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the national assembly elections in El Salvador and the implications for United Kingdom relations with that country.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We welcome the national assembly and municipal elections in El Salvador as a further step in the consolidation of democracy there. We have good relations with El Salvador.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have made its offer of military aid to President Duarte of El Salvador conditional upon progress in the field of human rights in that country.

Mr. Luce: The Salvadorean Government are well aware of our general concern about human rights. President Duarte is publicly committed to ending human rights abuses, strengthening democracy and seeking national reconciliation. We support those objectives.

Central America

13. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his merican counterpart concerning United States involvement in Central America.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We are in close and constant touch with the United States Government on matters of mutual interest which include Central America. Most recently I met Secretary of State Shultz in Washington on 21 February.

17. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any recent representations to the United States Government in connection with Central America.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We regularly discuss a range of issues, including Central America, with the United States Government at a number of levels. They are fully aware of our views about the region.

52. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Central America.

66. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the recent Nicaraguan Government initiative to improve their relations with the United States of America.

Mr. Rifkind: We wish to see an early and comprehensive negotiated settlement of the current tensions in the region. We and our European Community partners have accordingly given firm and consistent support to the efforts of the Contadora Group. We gave practical expression to this support at the meeting of European and regional Foreign Ministers at San Jose in September, attended by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Middle East

14. Mr. Mark Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the Government towards the Arab-Israeli peace proposals recently put forward by the Egyptian Government.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend discussed this subject with President Mubarak last week. We welcome all practical proposals to bring the parties together for negotiations aimed at a comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute.

20. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards peace in the middle east.

25. Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent peace initiatives in the middle east.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We remain committed to achieving a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute which will provide for the Palestinian right to self-determination and Israel's right to exist behind secure borders. We support King Hussein's efforts to arrive at a common Arab position, and President Mubarak's further suggestions in that direction.

68. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when next he intends to discuss peace initiatives in the middle east with President Reagan.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend discussed recent developments in the middle east with President Reagan and the United States Secretary of State during their February visit to Washington. We exchange views regularly with the United States Administration on the prospects for peace in the middle east, and shall continue to do so.

Latin American Debt

15. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the foreign policy implications of the Latin American debt crisis.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Latin American debt problem has led to an intensified dialogue between ourselves and the debtor countries of the area. The British Government have played a leading role in promoting co-operation between Governments, international institutions and banks to tackle the problem of international debt.

South Africa

16. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when last he met representatives of the South African Government; and what topics were discussed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The South African ambassador called on me on 21 September 1984 when we discussed bilateral questions, including the situation created by the presence of the six men who had sought refuge in our Durban consulate.

Cyprus

18. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action he proposes to take to assist the achievement of a settlement in Cyprus.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We will continue to support the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General to seek a settlement to the Cyprus question. We shall remain in close touch with all the parties concerned and impress upon them the need to seize the opportunity which the Secretary-General has created.

Indonesia

19. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Indonesia.

Mr. Luce: We enjoy good relations with Indonesia with which we share an identity of views on many international issues. I know that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is looking forward to her visit there next month.

Cardinal Glemp

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to the United Kingdom of the Primate of Poland, Cardinal Glemp.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We welcomed Cardinal Glemp's visit to Britain. His visit from 21 February to 4 March was an ecclesiastical and pastoral one. We were not involved in the arrangements, but I had a private and informal meeting with Cardinal Glemp.

Hong Kong

27. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent talks have taken place between the British and Chinese Governments in the light of last year's agreement on Hong Kong.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Since my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I visited Peking in December last year a number of points related to the implementation of the agreement have been discussed in the course of normal diplomatic contacts with the Chinese Government. I shall inform the House in due course of progress on the establishment of the joint liaison group and on other issues.

Israel

28. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the discussions which took place during his recent visit to Israel.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) on 14 November at column 672.

Egypt

29. Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Egyptian relations in the light of the visit to the United Kingdom of the Egyptian President.

56. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit of President Mubarak of Egypt.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo).

Zimbabwe

30. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made regarding the arrests of trade unionists in Zimbabwe on and after Friday 1 March.

Mr. Rifkind: We have no standing to make formal representations on behalf of non-British citizens. With regard to the British subject detained during the same period, a deportation order has been served on him but not yet implemented. Our high commission has been instructed to tell the Zimbabwean authorities that we hope his case will be speedily resolved.

38. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking within the Commonwealth to inhibit civil conflict in Zimbabwe.

Mr. Rifkind: The domestic affairs of a member are not discussed within the Commonwealth without the express approval of the Government concerned. However, the Zimbabwean authorities are well aware of our hope for a political solution to the problems of Matabeleland and for political reconciliation in general, as well as of our concern about recent reports of abduction and murder. It should be remembered that all the main political parties have been the targets of violence.

VE Day (40th Anniversary)

31. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with ambassadors and high commissioners of all countries represented in London concerning the planned commemoration of the end of the second world war announced by the Prime Minister on Thursday 14 February.

Mr. Rifkind: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated on 14 February, at column 230, in reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point, (Sir B. Braine), ambassadors and high commissioners of all countries represented in London will be invited.

Eastern Europe

32. Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit eastern Europe.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend will visit east Berlin from 8 to 10 April, Prague from 10 to 11 April and Warsaw from 11 to 13 April.

Middle East (Ministerial Visit)

33. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the recent visit to the middle east by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce).

Mr. Luce: Between 3 and 7 March I visited the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Saudi Arabia. I had a very useful set of discussions with leading figures in both countries, including King Fahd in Saudi Arabia. I was able to review the very satisfactory state of our bilateral relations and exchange views on major international issues, particularly the Arab-Israel dispute, Lebanon and the Iran-Iraq conflict.

Nicaragua

34. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans for an early visit to Nicaragua.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit Nicaragua.

Falkland Islands

36. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Falkland Islands Council concerning the development of mineral resources in the seas around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Rifkind: We are in regular contact with the Falkland Islands Government, through the civil commissioner about this and other economic issues.

43. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the document on the future of the Falklands agreed by parliamentary delegations from the United Kingdom and Argentina at recent talks in the United States of America, a copy of which has been sent to him.

50. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has considered the paper on the future of the Falklands agreed by parliamentary delegations from the United Kingdom and Argentina in recent talks in the United States of America, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has carefully studied the document adopted at the Maryland conference. It refers to a discussion with Argentina of "all aspects of the future of the Islands;" but this is no more than a euphemism for the discussion of sovereignty. The document then reiterates the Argentine insistence of linkage between discussion of practical ways to improve our bilateral relations and discussion of sovereignty, which remains the obstacle to progress.

We are not prepared to discuss the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands. The way ahead must be through agreement on practical issues of interest of both this country and Argentina. We look to the Argentine Government for a constructive reply to the message we sent them earlier this year.

Brazil

37. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has plans to meet representatives of the new Government of Brazil to discuss ways of increasing co-operation between Great Britain and Brazil.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at present. But my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord President of the Council had an opportunity to discuss a number of bilateral issues when he attended the inauguration of the new President of Brazil, Dr. Tancredo Neves, on 15 March.

Human Rights (Afghanistan)

39. Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken at the United Nations to expose violations of human rights in Afghanistan.

Mr. Rifkind: We have spoken out firmly and frequently against the immense human suffering inflicted on the Afghan people by the continuing Soviet occupation. The United Kingdom supported the recommendation of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur on Afghanistan. We co-sponsored the resolution adopted by the Commission last week expressing profound concern at grave and massive human rights violations and renewing the rapporteur's mandate for a further year.

Mr. Abu Nidhal

40. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Syrian Government about the terrorist activities of Mr. Abu Nidhal, now based in Syria.

Mr. Luce: We have made known to the Syrian Government on a number of occasions our strong views on international terrorism. They are fully aware of the serious concern felt in this country about the activities of the Abu Nidhal Group.

South Africa (Uranium)

41. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it remains Her Majesty's Government's policy not to purchase uranium from South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is our policy not to assist South Africa in the development of its military and civil nuclear programmes. It has never been our policy to prohibit the purchase of uranium from South Africa, since that does not constitute such assistance.

Mutual Assistance (USA)

42. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have sought to negotiate with the United States Government since 1979 any new agreements for mutual assistance outside the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation area.

Mr. Luce: Any negotiations between us and the United States Government on matters of mutual interest outside the NATO area remain confidential between Governments.

Privatisation

44. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the estimated savings by his Department for 1985-86 as a result of privatisation schemes.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The privatisation of the overseas development unit of the hydraulics research station in 1982 will result in estimated savings of some £80,000 to the Overseas Development Administration in 1985-86.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is in addition contracting out a number of services and this is being extended. The diplomatic wing will save an estimated £737,775 in 1985-86 from travel and cleaning services contracted out during the current financial year. The aid wing will save an estimated £138,000 from the contracting out of official travel, cleaning and press cutting services.

Namibia (Contract Five Group)

45. Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to review the work of the Contact Five Group in relation to progress and new initiatives for achieving independence for Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend keeps in close touch with his Contact Group colleagues. They continue to examine ways in which they could make a constructive contribution to achieving Namibian independence. But clearly it would not be helpful to take initiatives which would cut across the current negotiations towards a settlement.

Soviet Foreign Minister

46. Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a date has yet been fixed for the planned visit to the United Kingdom of the Soviet Foreign Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. Dates are under discussion on diplomatic channels.

Decade for Women

47. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to reduce the amount of money to be spent on sending a delegation to the United Nations End of Decade for Women conference.

Mr. Rifkind: The composition of our delegation to the world conference of the United Nations Decade for Women was announced on 15 March. It is similar to that of our delegations to the two previous world conferences of the Decade although, in the interests of economy, the number of supporting officials has been reduced.

Libya

48. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Libya.

Mr. Luce: British and Libyan officials met in Rome on 5 March at Libyan request and through the good offices of the Italian protecting power. This was a useful opportunity to exchange information, reduce possible misunderstandings, and discuss administrative and other practical problems. The British side sought clarification of some recent statements by Colonel Gaddafi.

South African Ambassador

49. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit of the South African ambassador to the Foreign Office on 25 February.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) discussed with the South African ambassador recent developments in South Africa. He made clear that we welcomed recent positive developments but were concerned at the arrest of United Democratic Front leaders and in particular that four UDF supporters were detained without charge.

New Zealand

51. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's diplomatic relations with New Zealand.

63. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-New Zealand relations in the light of Mr. David Lange's recent visit.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Our relations with New Zealand are excellent, and we keep in close touch with the New Zealand Government. I had a meeting with Mr. Lange in New York last autumn and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister held talks with him in London on 4 March.

Human Rights (USSR)

53. Mr. Allen MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek an opportunity to raise individual cases of abuse of human rights in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics at the forthcoming Ottawa meeting to discuss CSCE issues.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not our practice to give a commitment in advance of such discussions to raise individual cases but they are something we shall have very much in mind when the Ottawa meeting discusses, as its mandate requires it to do, questions concerning respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms as embodied in the Helsinki final act.

Southern Lebanon

54. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received reports from the United Kingdom ambassador in Beirut about the situation in southern Lebanon.

Mr. Richard Luce: We receive regular reports from Her Majesty's ambassador and his staff about the situation in south Lebanon.

Human Rights (Chile)

55. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's voting record at the United Nations on Chilean human rights.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 28 and 31 January, at columns 23-24 and 299, to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes). Since then we have voted in favour of the resolution on Chile at the 1985 session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

Diplomatic Service (Business Men)

57. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek to recruit and second more business men into the commercial sections of the Diplomatic Service.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Diplomatic Service is keen to attract more people with business experience, though our general policy remains to recruit, through the Civil Service Commission, for a varied long-term career, and not for specific posts.

In 1982, we raised the age limit for entry to the administration grades from 28 to 32, with the specific aim of attracting candidates with relevant experience. The age limit for entry to the executive grades is 45. In 1983 we held an additional special competition open to candidates between 32 and 41, which succeeded in recruiting four offices at first secretary level from outside the Civil Service.

The Diplomatic Service also operates a programme of interchange of staff with private industry and commerce. Secondments last for two or three years; at present, 10 Diplomatic Service officers are seconded to British companies, and two posts within the Diplomatic Service are filled by private sector secondees. It is a valuable exchange which we hope to continue and expand.

Polaris

58. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will recommend the inclusion of the British Polaris weapons system in the Geneva talks.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft).

Honduras

61. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Honduras.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Iran-Iraq War

62. Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, based on recent contacts with the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia, there are any new moves that could be made to help resolve the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Luce: During my recent visit to the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia, I discussed the conflict in the Gulf at length, with particular reference to the need to bring it to an early end by diplomatic means. Both of those countries wish, as we do, to see the earliest possible end to this tragic and wasteful conflict. For their part, the British Government will continue to support any realistic initiatives aimed at ending the conflict—for example, through the good offices of the United Nations Secretary-General.

CSCE Conference on Human Rights

64. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming CSCE conference on human rights in Ottawa.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom intends to play a full and active part in this meeting which we regard as an important part of the Helsinki process.

In our view, the meeting should both consider the functioning of the human rights' provisions of the Helsinki final act since they were first drawn up and look forward at possible new measures to advance the cause of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the 35 CSCE participating states.

This two-stage approach reflects the mandate for the meeting agreed at Madrid in 1983 and set out in the Madrid concluding document (Cmnd. 9066).

Nelson Mandela

67. Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make a further appeal to the South African President for the unconditional release of Nelson Mandela.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the South African Prime Minister last year of our belief that Mr. Mandela should be released. We have continued to press for this.

El Salvador (Officer Training)

69. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects officers from the El Salvador military to begin training in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Rifkind: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) on 15 February at column 302.

Chile

70. Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Chile.

Mr. Rifkind: We maintain normal diplomatic relations with Chile and continue to express our concern at the need for an early return to political dialogue and democracy. Following the recent earthquake, we have given £80,000 of disaster relief through Caritas, the Chilean Red Cross and Christian Aid and are considering what further measures we might take to help the homeless.

Mrs. Oksana Mehko

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made representations to the Soviet Government concerning the five-year sentence of internal exile following ten years in labour camps, passed on Mrs. Oksana Mehko, founder member of the Ukranian Helsinki Monitoring Group.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend both raised the subject of human rights with Mr. Gorbachev in December. They made clear with reference to individuals exemplifying different categories of human rights abuse the concern that is felt on this issue by the Government, on both sides of the House and by the British public at large. The case of Mrs. Mehko is a particularly poignant example of such abuses and will certainly be borne in mind, along with others, in future representations to the Soviet authorities.

Bophuthatswana

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 307, to the hon. Member for Epping Forest, he will state in what ways Bophuthatswana does not enjoy genuine independence.

Mr. Luce: Amongst the criteria for recognition is that the country in question shall have an independent position, in the sense that it has full internal autonomy as well as full freedom of action in respect of external relations. We are not satisfied that Bophuthatswana, which came into existence as a result of South Africa's apartheid policies, possesses these attributes.

Africa (Independent States)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Her Majesty's Government recognise as independent states in Africa dependent upon economic, military and other assistance from outside.

Mr. Luce: The receipt of external economic, military or other assistance, does not necessarily detract from the attributes of a defined territory, an effective Government, and independence in its internal autonomy and external relations which are the criteria for recognition.

Saudi Arabia (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during the visit of the Minister of State to Saudi Arabia, he protested about the recent sentence of flogging passed on a British subject, Mr. John Kelly; and whether he discussed the methods of punishment employed by the Saudi authorities.

Mr. Luce: I made clear to my Saudi hosts that differences of culture, law and tradition could give rise to strong feelings in both countries which they and we should work to overcome. Her Majesty's embassy in Jedda had already expressed to the local Saudi authorities its concern at the severity of the sentence passed on Mr. Kelly.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) said on 27 June 1984, at column 981, we accept that there is concern in Britain over the methods of punishment employed in Saudi Arabia. The Saudi authorities have been made aware that the administration of strokes of the cane is abhorrent to British opinion. Most expatriates are well aware that corporal punishment is almost invariably imposed in cases of breaches of the Saudi law relating to alcohol. I understand that the ordeal is not intended to inflict severe pain. It is intended more as a humiliation than as a physical punishment.

Gibraltar

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals Her Majesty's Government have received from the Spanish Government on the future status of Gibraltar.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As foreshadowed by the Spanish Foreign Minister during our meeting in Geneva on 5 February, the Spanish Government have delivered proposals concerning the future status of Gibraltar. Whilst the details of these proposals must remain confidential at this stage, they involve suggestions for the eventual transfer of sovereignty, including a period of shared responsibility. These proposals are of course being studied against the background of our undertaking to respect the freely and democratically expressed wishes of the people of Gibraltar, enshrined in the preamble to Gibraltar's 1969 constitution.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the Spanish Foreign Minister to discuss Spanish claims for the integration of Gibraltar with Spain at some future date.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The terms of the Brussels agreement implemented on 5 February provided for the establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all differences over Gibraltar and at promoting co-operation in various fields on a mutually beneficial basis. I intend to meet the Spanish Foreign Minister in this context towards the end of this year.

In those discussions I shall have very much in mind the pledge enshrined in the Gibraltar constitution of 1969 that we will never enter into arrangements under which the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes.

Hong Kong (Refugees)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about the treatment of refugees in Hong Kong.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Under the provisions of the Hong Kong Immigration Ordinance, all Vietnamese refugees arriving in Hong Kong are permitted to remain in the territory pending their resettlement elsewhere. During their stay they are accommodated in closed centres run by the Hong Kong Government in co-operation with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. Both we and the Hong Kong authorities are making every effort, in consultation with United Nations High Commission for Refugees, to secure a durable solution for all those still in the camps.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are (a) the total levels of unemployment, (b) the number of schoolleavers unemployed and (c) the number unemployed for more than one, two and three years, respectively, for the Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley constituency for the latest available date and for the equivalent date in 1984, 1983, 1982, 1981 and 1980, respectively.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret the information is not available in the form requested. Unemployment figures by constituency are available in the House of Commons Library, but only from June 1983. The Library can, however, supply, for the period requested, information on unemployment by duration and the number of unemployed school leavers for the Cumnock, Ayr and Girvan jobcentre areas within which the constituency is located. The figures are not directly comparable over the years because of the change to a claimant based count in October 1982.

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are unemployed in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency compared with 1979 as a total and a percentage; and of the total unemployed, how many are long-term unemployed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret the information is not available in the precise form requested. As the hon. Member will know from my right hon. Friend's letter of 22 October 1984, unemployment totals for parliamentary constituencies are only available from June 1983 and can be obtained from the Library. The Library can also supply information on the number of unemployed and long-term unemployed persons (that is those without employment for more than a year) in the Shawlands, Govan and Barrhead jobcentre areas—within which the Pollok constituency is located—at January 1985, the latest date for which the information is available, and January 1979. The figures are not directly comparable because of the change in October 1982 in the basis of the count. Unemployment percentage rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs were lost in the industrial classification sectors of industries in Glasgow in each year since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not available, but the results of the 1984 census of employment are expected later in the year.

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total of employed persons in the Glasgow travel-to-work area for each year since 1970.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The available information relates to estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in the Glasgow travel-to-work area* for each of the years 1971 to 1978, and for 1981; and is as follows:

	Numbers
1971	552,400
1972	542,300
1973	555,700
1974	553,300
1975	548,700
1976	547,100
1977	535,000
1978	527,500
1981	479,700

* As defined prior to the 1984 review.

These figures are taken from the census of employment, which was annual up to 1978 and has been taken every three years since then. Figures from the 1984 census will be available shortly.

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the measures taken to reduce the level of unemployment in the Glasgow travel-to-work area since May 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government's overall policies, designed to reduce the previously high levels of inflation and to offer real incentive for enterprise, provide the framework within which more jobs can be created. Our programme includes a heavy investment in training, through the youth training scheme and the adult training strategy, to produce a better trained, adaptable, skilled work force to meet the changing skill requirements of this new technological age. Glasgow, as other parts of the country, can expect to derive benefit from these overall policies. Specific measures taken by us since May 1979 to assist the economic development of and reduce the level of unemployment in the Glasgow travel-to-work area include:—

Economic Measures:

Regional Development Grant at the maximum level available;

Selective Financial Assistance under the Industrial Development Act 1982;

Scottish Development Agency Financial Assistance (for example, to Glasgow Eastern Area Renewal project);

Local Enterprise Grants for Urban Projects (the LEG-UP scheme);

Financial Assistance under the Housing Acts.

Special Employment Measures:

Youth Opportunities Programme;

Youth Employment Subsidy;

Young Workers Scheme;

Community Industry;

Job Creation Programme;

Special Temporary Employment Programme;

Community Enterprise Programme;

Community Programme;

Temporary Short-time Working Compensation;

Job Release Scheme;

Job Splitting Scheme;

Temporary Employment Subsidy;

Small Firms Employment Subsidy;

Enterprise Allowance Scheme;

Voluntary Projects Programme;

Geographical Mobility Schemes;

Services for Seriously Disabled.

Edinburgh Western Relief Road (Inquiry)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the transcript of the evidence in the recent inquiry by parliamentary commissioners into the Lothian Region (Edinburgh Western Relief Road) Provisional Order will be available to hon. Members.

Mr. Ancram: A transcript of the evidence will be placed in the Library of each House, probably towards the end of April.

Scottish Development Agency (Grants and Loans)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek from the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency information about grants or loans awarded by the agency over the past six months to individuals whose financial affairs had at the time been put in trust; if he will publish details in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 446]: I understand that the Scottish Development Agency would not award a grant or loan to an individual whose financial affairs it knew to have been placed in trust. Nor is the agency aware of any case where a grant or loan was awarded to an individual whose financial affairs were discovered subsequently to have been in trust at the time of the award.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 21 March 1985

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Non-payment of Rent

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Attorney-General how many people were evicted for non-payment of rent in 1982, 1983, 1984, and 1985, respectively.

The Solicitor-General: Statistics are not collected of the number of people evicted specifically for non-payment of rent. It is, however, estimated that in England and Wales the following number of warrants were executed for possession of residential property (for whatever reason) on behalf of private landlords and social landlords (mainly local authorities).

	1982	1983	1984
Private landlords	3,120	3,220	3,480
Social landlords	11,960	10,150	10,110

These estimates are based on a sample of three separate months data (February, June and October) collected during each of the years shown. No figures are yet available for 1985.

TRANSPORT

Road Building (Costs)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current average cost of constructing one mile of (a) dual two-lane motorway, (b) dual three-lane motorway, (c) dual two-lane urban motorway, (d) dual three-lane urban motorway, (e) all purpose dual two-lane carriageway, (f) all purpose dual three-lane carriageway and (g) single carriageway.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

(a) £3 million.
(b) £5 million.
(c) £7 million.
(d) £10 million.
(e) £3 million.
(f) No figures available.
(g) £1 million.

All figures are at current prices and cover works only. Costs of land, rehousing, preparation and supervision and so on add between 20 and 25 per cent. to total costs. The figures given are averages. Construction costs of motorways and trunk roads vary widely depending in particular on the nature of the terrain through which the road passes.

Road Building (Contracts)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 20 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road construction contracts in each of the last three years, giving for each contractor the value of the contracts received.

Mrs. Chalker: During each of the three yars 1982, 1983 and 1984 motorway and trunk road construction contracts over £100,000 in value were awarded as follows:

1982	£ million
1. A. Monk & Co. Plc	33·4
2. Sir Alfred McAlpine & Son Limited*	29·9
3. Tarmac Construction Limited	21·1
4. John Laing Construction Limited	20·1
5. John Mowlem & Co. Limited	18·5

Trunk Roads

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report figures for miles and costs in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 for trunk road new construction, structural maintenance and routine maintenance.

Mrs. Chalker: For England, the information requested is as follows:

	1983-84 Outturn		1984-85 Forecast		1985-86 Planned
	Expenditure £ million (net)	Miles completed	Expenditure £ million (net)	Miles completed	Expenditure £ million (net)	Miles completed
New construction	514	95	578	73	599	98
Capital maintenance (structural)	130	188	150	227	144	177
Current maintenance (routine)	63	N/A	79	N/A	79	N/A

Notes:

1. Expenditure figures include payments for work still under way at the end of the year.
2. Capital maintenance expenditure figures include purchases of vehicles and equipment for winter maintenance as well as structural maintenance work.
3. Current maintenance expenditure figures include lighting, motorway communications and winter maintenance and other miscellaneous items as well as routine maintenance.
4. All mileage figures are expressed as route miles completed.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give an estimated breakdown of the trunk road budget into the following components: land acquisition, design, road safety, administration, labour, purchase of materials and other.

Mrs. Chalker: The Supply Estimates in Class VI, 1, Roads etc, England, published 19 March make provision for expenditure of £824 million. A breakdown by components for new construction is as follows:

	£ million
Land acquisition	49
Design and Supervision	90
Labour	120
Purchase of materials	251
Plant	109

The component for maintenance and miscellaneous items is £231 million; road safety £5 million. Estimated receipts are some £30 million. There is provision for £25 million administration costs in Class VI, 2.

Bitumen Coated Materials

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many tonnes of bitumen coated materials are used each year in his Department's road programme.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department does not compile central records of the amount of bitumen coated materials used each year in the national road programme on construction or maintenance works.

New Road Schemes

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of new road schemes he expects will be let in rigid construction in 1985-86; and how this compares with 1984-85 and 1983-84.

Mrs. Chalker: The proportion of new road schemes to be let in rigid construction in 1985-86 cannot be estimated since it is dependent on the value of alternative tenders which have yet to be submitted by contractors. Some 23 per cent. of schemes were let in rigid construction in the first three quarters of 1984-85 and 46 per cent. in 1983-84.

Passenger Trains (Punctuality)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of passenger trains arrive on time.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from British Rail that during 1984, 77 per cent. of its passenger trains arrived on time and 90·5 per cent. within five minutes of scheduled time.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer given in the Official Report on 11 March, column 51, if he will amend the criteria for eligibility for transport supplementary grant so as to include small low-cost engineering schemes on roads other than those of more than local importance in order to give incentives to highway authorities to carry out cost-effective improvement schemes for accident reduction.

Mrs. Chalker: Local authorities should not need special financial incentives to carry out cost-effective improvement schemes on roads of only local importance. They receive general support through block grant, and it is for them to determine their expenditure priorities.

South Stack (Disappearance)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions his Department's inquiry reached in relation to the disappearance of the South Stack in the North sea; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. David Mitchell: It has not been possible to establish with certainty the reason for the loss of this vessel but the most probable explanation is that she capsized. It is not the practice to publish inquiry reports of this kind, but the facts are always made available to interested parties. This is to be done shortly in the case of the South Stack.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the spray suppression regulations for heavy goods vehicles.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department has been consulting on an amendment to exempt certain special trailers, built to carry abnormal indivisible loads, on which it is not practicable to fit the prescribed spray suppression equipment.

Seat Belts

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish a report on the effects of compulsory seat belt wearing.

Mrs. Chalker: The TRRL will shortly be issuing a preliminary report on the effects of compulsion based on evidence from the first 12 months. A copy will be placed in the Libraries.

My Department will be publishing, during the summer, a full report on the results of its seat belt monitoring exercise. This will take account of the data analysis undertaken in the Department itself and at the TRRL and will also draw on accident and injury studies carried out in a number of hospitals and at universities. In addition, I have invited Professor James Durbin and Professor Andrew Harvey of the London School of Economics to contribute an independent assessment of all the available statistical evidence on the effects of compulsory seat belt wearing in this country. Professors Durbin and Harvey will want to take account of the views of outside organisations and individuals in preparing their assessment.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Reform

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to prevent activities of the Greater London Council which are designed to frustrate the Government's abolition proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 24 July last my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced his intention to seek powers in the Local Government Bill requiring his consent to be obtained to the provision of financial assistance by the GLC-MCCs to other local authorities. That provision is now in clause 89 of the Bill, and it supplements the controls in the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 over section 137 expenditure, major contracts and property disposals. At the same time, my right hon. Friend said that he would not hesitate to take further steps, where necessary, to prevent continuing activity designed to frustrate the Government's abolition proposals.

The Bill provides that rights and liabilities of the GLC-MCCs existing at abolition will pass to successor authorities. It has been brought to my notice that some of the abolition authorities will seek to exploit this provision with the intention of perpetuating their policies long after they are abolished and thereby putting at risk the savings that will result from abolition. They would achieve this by creating continuing liabilities for successor authorities. The most notable example of such arrangements concerns legally enforceable undertakings to provide, or to guarantee, financial assistance to third parties.

My right hon. Friend has therefore tabled an amendment to the Local Government Bill which will have the effect of requiring the Secretary of State's consent to any enforceable agreement or arrangement proposed to be made by the GLC or an MCC under which a liability would pass, on abolition, to successor authorities.

The control over contracts in section 9 of the Interim Provisions Act contains a disaggregation provision designed to prevent large contracts from being broken up into separate units, each below the relevant value thresholds. I am aware that this provision is being interpreted narrowly by some of the authorities. I therefore propose to amend the Act to reduce the minimum value above which consent is required to £15,000.

I have given careful consideration to the sanctions that should be applied for a failure to obtain consent in the case of both the existing controls over land disposals and contracts, and those now proposed over other enforceable agreements and arrangements. I am proposing that the existing sanction of a liability to disqualification by the High Court from local government office should also apply to a failure to comply with the new provisions. The right to apply to the court will, in addition, extend to a successor authority.

I am concerned, however, that in the face of the continuing threats of grossly irresponsible activity by some of the abolition authorities, this sanction will not by itself, prove to be a sufficient deterrent. I am proposing that the court should also be empowered in each case to order the member responsible to be the subject of a financial penalty, in the terms defined in the relevant clauses. And in order to protect successor authorities absolutely from damaging actions, I am proposing that where the Secretary of State's consent under the provisions is not obtained, any disposal of any interest in land would be totally void, and that any contract, or any other enforceable agreement or arrangement, capable of surviving beyond abolition, would be unenforceable against a successor authority.

I am aware that an abolition authority's failure to obtain consent under the provisions would affect the interests of third parties. I am therefore taking steps to give publicity to the proposals in order to ensure that their potential effect is widely understood.

In the light of past experience of the authorities' willingness to evade the consequences of new legislation before it takes effect, and continuing threats of irresponsible activity, the amendments which my right hon. Friend has tabled to the Local Government Bill will, with Parliament's consent, take effect from midnight tonight.

In principle, I would propose that the general consents issued under sections 7, 8 and 9 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 should be extended to activities covered by the proposed new controls over enforceable arrangements. I shall also be considering the issue of further general consents for activities which leave no scope for obstructive action. These might include, for example, commitments by ILEA to voluntary schools and grants to individual students, together with grants by the GLC under the homes insulation scheme, and certain grants for home improvement. Letters have today been sent to the GLC and metropolitan county councils notifying them of these proposals and inviting suggestions for general consents.

New Towns

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now reached a conclusion on the future of the three north-east new towns.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: In May 1984 we sought the views of the local authorities concerned in the development of the three new towns of Aycliffe, Peterlee, and Washington on the future of these towns. We also asked other interested bodies and individuals to let us have their views. We asked for comment particularly on whether the purposes for which the development corporations were established had been substantially achieved, and on the target date of 31 December 1985 which had been set for winding up the three development corporations. The response to these consultations showed clearly the high opinion held locally of the value of the work done by these corporations, and that there was scope for this to continue. The Government have accordingly concluded that it would be appropriate to defer the winding-up date to 31 March 1988.

Between now and then we shall expect the corporations to pursue their work in developing industry and commerce in their towns, and with that the generation of jobs, relying to the maximum on private investment. We shall also expect them, in consultation with the Commission for the New Towns, the English Industrial Estates Corporation (for the industrial estates), and local organisations, to prepare satisfactory arrangements for the period after 31 March 1988.

Since 1963 Aycliffe and Peterlee development corporations have had the same membership. In order to simplify the management and administration of their work, we shall consult them about using the powers under section 6 of the New Towns Act 1981 to bring them into a single corporation.

Reema Waffle Houses

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Reema Waffle houses are included in the designated list of houses attracting buy-back or repair grants under the provisions of the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Gow: No. The only type of Reema house designated under the Act is the Reema hollow panel type.

Local Authorities (Housing Expenditure)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) gross and (b) net capital expenditure by each local authority on housing and (c) current expenditure on repairs and maintenance to existing housing stock in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85, estimate.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: English local authorities' gross capital expenditure on housing and prescribed proportion of housing capital receipts appear for 1981-82 and 1982-83 in tables attached to my Department's press notices No. 273 (27 July 1982) and No. 290 (18 July 1983), respectively, and for 1983-84 in the table referred to in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 20 July 1984, at column 360. The 1981-82 and 1982-83 editions of "Housing Revenue Account Statistics Actuals", published by CIPFA, show the authorities' expenditure on repair and maintenance. All these sources are available in the Library.

I have today placed in the Library a table showing authorities' capital expenditure and receipts in the first nine months of 1984-85 and another showing their reported expenditure on repair and maintenance in 1983-84 and estimates for 1984-85.

Local Authority Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) gross and (b) net capital expenditure by each local authority in England in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85 (estimates), showing the total for each class of authority.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Figures for capital payments and receipts by local authorities in England in 1981-82 to 1983-84 are published in the CIPFA publications "Capital Expenditure and Debt Financing Statistics" for those years. Copies of these are held in the Library. Estimates of 1984-85 expenditure by individual authorities or by class of authority are not available. The latest forecast for total net local authority capital expenditure in England against the DOE-LAI cash limit in the current year is £3·2 billion.

Council Houses

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority dwellings were let to new tenants in the year 1983-84, by region (a) through the waiting list normal allocation and (b) other.

Sir George Young: The information provided by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns is as follows:

Local authority dwellings let to new tenants 1983-84

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the extent to which, as part of its overall function, it has a duty to represent the views of voluntary nature conservation organisations in meetings with any other statutory authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Nature Conservancy Council has no statutory duty to represent the views of voluntary nature conservation organisations in meetings with other statutory authorities. The council is willing to receive representations from voluntary bodies: but it is for it to decide how best to draw on them in its discussions with other statutory authorities.

House of Commons Sittings (Cost)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will up-date the figures given in reply to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) Official Report, 25 April 1984, column 526, regarding the total additional cost to his Department of the House sitting from (a) 10.30 pm to midnight and (b) from midnight to 2 am; and if he will give similar estimates for such periods after 2 am as figures are conveniently available.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Home Purchase Scheme

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the home purchase scheme for primarily first time buyers was first set up; what were the financial limits then; and if he has any proposed plans to upgrade the amounts.

Sir George Young: The home purchase assistances scheme was set up in 1978. It offers first-time purchasers a loan of £600, free of interest and repayment of principal for up to five years, and a cash bonus of up to £110. These benefits are available to first-time buyers who have saved under the scheme for two years and who buy a property below the house price limit for their area. Separate house price limits are set for each of the English regions, Scotland and Wales. They are regularly reviewed and increased so that two thirds of first-time purchasers qualify. We have no plans at present to alter the benefits available.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Property Services Agency is involved in any work for United States forces in the north of Scotland.

Sir George Young: Yes; the Property Services Agency undertakes major and minor works services and maintenance for the US forces throughout the United Kingdom.

Under-fives (Projects)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which time-expired projects relating to provision for the under-fives submitted under the inner cities programme for refunding in 1985-86 have been refused or part approved; and in the case of part approvals, what are the figures for grants in 1984-85 and 1985-86;

(2) if he will list the under-fives projects submitted for funding under the traditional urban programme 1985-86;

(3) which local authorities which have received traditional urban programme funding for under-fives projects in the past will not receive it in 1985-86;

(4) how many traditional urban programme time expired projects for the under-fives have been submitted for refunding; how many of these will not be refunded; and if he will list them by authority.

Sir George Young: Detailed information about urban programme projects specifieally for the under-fives is not collected, as many projects cater for a wide range of ages and activities. Figures for part approvals for such schemes in 1984-85 are therefore not available. For 1985-86, decisions have yet to be taken on applicatons under the traditional urban programme, except for holiday play-schemes, and on inner area programmes submitted by partnership and programme authorities.

Pay Schemes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify the London local authorities which have received less under the traditional urban programme for play schemes in 1985-86 compared with 1984-85; and what is the size of the reduction in cash and percentage terms for each authority.

Sir George Young: Eleven London local authorities received reduced support for holiday play schemes under the traditional urban programme in 1985-86 compared with 1984-85. The size of the reduction in cash and percentage terms is as follows:

Local authority	Reduction in cash £	Percentage reduction
Camden	10,658	48
Ealing	5,450	25
Greenwich	12,706	48
Haringey	13,000	48
Kensington and Chelsea	4,400	25
Lewisham	13,000	52
Newham	6,063	28
Southwark	14,000	54
Waltham Forest	9,490	43
Westminster	11,215	51
ILEA	17,040	60

In addition, the following authorities which had received support in 1984-85 received no support in 1985-86:

Local authority	Amount approved in 1984-85 £
Barking and Dagenham	2,235
Croydon	7,500
Enfield	5,650
Hounslow	12,053
Merton	8,300
Redbridge	2,000

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to cut support to holiday play schemes through the traditional urban programme in 1985-86, in authorities other than the London boroughs; and by how much to each authority.

Sir George Young: Total support for holiday play schemes under the traditional urban programme will be £400,000 in 1985-86. This is about half the 1984-85 figure and the proportional reduction for local authorities outside London taken together is about the same. In 1985-86, support has been concentrated in the most deprived area, so reductions vary between authorities. Lists are available in the Library giving full details both of 1985-86 approvals and of those for earlier years.

Conservation (Management Agreements)

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the financial guidelines for management agreements drawn up in accordance with section 50 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have appointed Lawrence Gould Consultants Ltd. to undertake a detailed review of the operations of the guidelines, which have been criticised by the Environment Committee for their complexity. The review, which will consider options for simplifying the guidelines, will pay particular attention to the Environment Committee's comments and recommendations. It is expected to take about four months.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Military Lands Act

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests under the Military Lands Act byelaws there have been in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information collected centrally, which may be incomplete, relates to persons proceeded against or cautioned by the police for offences under the Military Lands Acts 1892 to 1903 and bylaws made thereunder and is given in the table. Information on persons arrested and subsequently released without further such action could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. Corresponding information for 1984 is not yet available.

Prisons (Fire Drill)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the fire drill procedure that takes place in prisons in England and Wales; how often it takes place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The fire drill procedure for Prison Department establishments in England and Wales is set out in the Prison Department's "Fire Precautions Manual", a copy of which has been place in the Library of the House. Subject to any overriding security or control considerations, a full fire practice should be held at least once in six months. Where practicable, the exercises include the evacuation of selected buildings and calling the local fire brigade.

Prisons (Bedding)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the type of bedding supplied in prisons in England and Wales; and if it is fire resistant.

Mr. Mellor: Bedding supplied in Prison Department establishments includes cotton sheets, polyurethane mattresses and pillows, and either woollen or cotton blankets and rugs. All sheets are flame retardant. New style mattresses recently introduced into closed cellular accommodation are flame retardant; the old style mattresses (which are being replaced by the new mattresses during this year) are not themselves flame retardant but have a flame retardant cover. The pillows, woollen blankets and rugs are not flame retardant, but work is in hand to develop and introduce flame retardant versions.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the percentage of fiancés and husbands refused entry clearance; and what percentage was wholly on grounds of primary purposes and what percentage partly on those grounds.

Mr. Waddington: Nearly one half of all applications for entry clearance to the United Kingdom from husbands and fiancés in the Indian subcontinent were refused in 1984. About one third of all applications were refused solely on primary purpose grounds, and about 1 in 25 were refused partly on these grounds. Corresponding information for countries outside the Indian subcontinent is not available.

Police (Efficiency and Effectiveness)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how his Department intends to increase police efficiency and effectiveness.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary will continue to encourage forces to manage resources efficiently and effectively and to ensure that examples of good practice are widely disseminated. Improved police efficiency and effectiveness is a major objective of many aspects of the Department's work, including crime prevention, police training, new technology and research.

Intex 85

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the targets of nuclear attack in Britain during the Intex 85 exercise;

(2) what was the total number of deaths envisaged throughout the European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries during the Intex 85 exercise;

(3) what was the total explosive yield of the nuclear attack on European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries during the Intex 85 exercise;

(4) if he will state the total explosive yield of the simulated nuclear attack on Britain during the Intex 85 civil defence exercise.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Intex 85 is one in a series of annual international exercises prepared and co-ordinated by the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation for national civil warning and monitoring organisations in European NATO countries. The exercise scenario is designed to test all parts of the warning and monitoring system and is not an indication of any specific Government planning assumption.

On this occasion a total of 164 bombs with a range of theoretical explosive yields between 100 Kt and 2 Mt were deemed to have been detonated over the United Kingdom and a further 180 bombs in the range 5 Kt to 2 Mt were plotted over the continental NATO countries. The total explosive yield is not readily available. The locations of the nuclear bursts were distributed over the widest geographical area in order to ensure that all parts of the organisations and their monitoring procedures were fully practiced in pre-selected weather conditions. Casualty estimates were not made.

Suicides (Yorkshire)

Mr. W. Benyon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of all recorded suicide verdicts by coroner's courts in Yorkshire involving deaths of girls aged under 16 years between 20 December 1984 and 11 January 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There have been no suicide verdicts recorded by Yorkshire coroners between the dates specified involving the deaths of girls under 16 years of age.

Police (Disclosure of Information)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to amend the arrangements regarding disclosures of information by the police to social services departments about previous convictions of any employee or potential employees in residential care in the (a) private sector, (b) voluntary sector, (c) local authority sector of homes for (i) the elderly, (ii) the mentally handicapped, (iii) the physically handicapped and (iv) the chronically ill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has announced his intention to review the arrangements under which information about the criminal background of those who seek to work in positions of responsibility for children is made available to those who need to know it. The terms of reference for this review, which he will announce very shortly, will not extend to the groups mentioned in the hon. Member's question. But he is willing to consider evidence of the need for a change of practice in respect of these groups, and has not ruled out the possible need to extend the review at a later stage.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

High Density Polythene Sheeting

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the restriction on imports of high density polythene sheeting from the United States of America into the European Economic Community.

Mr. Channon: High density polyethylene film is one of those products of which imports from the USA have been restricted by the Community since March 1984 in retaliation against American import restrictions on certain special steels. This action was taken to impress on the Americans the need to uphold their international obligations to maintain open and fair trade.

Postal Communications (Soviet Union)

Rev Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many P58 claim forms were received by the Post Office during 1984 in respect of items sent by post from the United Kingdom to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the previous five years;

(2) how many registered postal letters and packets sent from the United Kingdom to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1984 were reported as missing by the Post Office; and what were the corresponding figures for the previous five years;

(3) how many registered postal communicaions were despatched through the Post Office in 1984 and were sent to addresses in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, but were subsequently returned to senders in the United Kingdom under article 122 of the universal postal union convention; and what were the corresponding figures for the previous five years;

(4) on how many occasions in 1984 the Post Office reported that registered letters and packets sent from the United Kingdom to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had been confiscated by the Soviet postal authorities; and what were the corresponding figures for the previous five years.

Mr. Pattie: The information requested is a matter for the Post Office, which has told me, however, that such information is not available.

Basildon (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the visit to Basildon on 13 March by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for small businesses, the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier).

Mr. Trippier: I was most grateful to my hon. Friend for affording me the opportunity to visit his constituency on 13 March. During the course of the day I visited a number of small firms and was most impressed with the enterprise and initiative which I saw in a number of sectors, ranging from advanced robotics to shopfitting. I believe that these small entrepreneurs will play a vital role in supporting Basildon's future economic prosperity and will continue to make a major contribution to the creation of new jobs.

I was also particularly pleased to meet some of the directors of Basildon Enterprise Agency and to learn that the agency is performing well in encouraging the establishment and growth of small firms in the area. I know that my hon. Friend is a great supporter of the agency.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the information technology education centres in the United Kingdom; and if he will give for each one (a) the number of staff, full-time equivalents, (b) the number of available places in the current year, (c) the number of unfilled places in the current year and (d) the cost in the current year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently 163 information technology centres (ITeCs) in operation and these are as follows. The Manpower Services Commission does not keep centrally detailed information about individual ITeCs and this could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, national figures for the ITeC programme are available and at the end of February there were 1,111 adult staff, 5,994 available places and 5,248 trainees in training, comprising young people on both 1983-84 and 1984-85 schemes. The cost of the programme to the commission in the current financial year is estimated to be about 24 million.

North-West Tourist Board (Exhibition)

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the North-West tourist board to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 25 March to Friday 29 March 1985.

EMPLOYMENT

Visual Display Units

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will introduce regulations to require the provision of suitable lighting for workers who use visual display units.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no evidence to suggest that specific regulations covering the provision of suitable lighting for workers who use visual display units are needed. The Factories Act 1961 and the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963 both require the provision and maintenance of sufficient and suitable lighting in workrooms. In addition, the general provisions of section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 require employers to provide and maintain suitable lighting.

Youthaid

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he plans to hold consultations with representatives of Youthaid about the relationship between the level of wages earned by youngsters and the level of awards by wages councils;

(2) if he plans to hold consultations with Youthaid about the possibility of referring to alternative programmes those youth training scheme trainees whose traineeships are interrupted because their sponsoring firms go into receivership.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Maternity Pay Fund

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the outturn figure for payments under the maternity pay fund in 1983-84.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During the year ended 31 March my Department paid employers rebates amounting to £57·5 million out of the maternity pay fund. This covered payments made to 131,401 employees.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department is currently supporting into the effects on health of those operating visual display units; and if he has considered asking the Health and Safety Commission to review matters in order to establish the facts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Service Sector Employees

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of people employed in the service sector in England in each of the last 10 years, giving the change in each year as a percentage of the total employed in that sector.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the estimated number of employees in employment in England in the service sector — divisions 6 to 9 of the 1980 standard industrial classification—at June in each of the last 10 years. It also gives the percentage change between each figure and the figure in the preceding year.

Service Industries—England

June each year	Employees in employment (thousands)	Percentage change from previous year
1975	10,838	+2·4
1976	10,883	+0·4
1977	10,956	+0·7
1978	11,131	+1·6
1979	11,443	+2·8
1980	11,555	+1·0
1981	11,338	−1·9
1982	11,296	−0·4
1983	11,310	+0·1
1984	11,541	+2·0

MSC (Official Journeys)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many individual journeys have been made at public expense by Manpower Services Commission officials above the rank of principal for each of the years 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85; and what has been the total cost of these journeys to the taxpayer.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

MSC (Computer Capacity)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the computer capacity available at Manpower Services Commission regional and area offices in the large companies unit; and how many trainee records can be maintained on computer at each of these offices.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The large companies unit of the MSC's training division does not have a computer to maintain records of trainees. Information about schemes administered by the large companies unit is included amongst the data held by computer systems operating within the network of regional and area offices in the training division.

One system deals with payment of allowances to TOPS and YTS trainees. The second processes data about YTS and provides information on the various local and national schemes and numbers of participants, as well as producing necessary management statistics. The latter system holds, on average, records of 28,000 participants at each area office.

MSC (New Technology)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Employment what investment has been made by the Manpower Services Commission in new technology to improve the administrative efficiency of the commission for each of the years 1981-82 to 1984-85, broken down by Selkirk house, Moorfoot, Sheffield, Manpower Services Commission regional offices, Manpower Services Commission area offices, the Manpower Services Commission large companies unit and each operating division of the commission; and if he will make a statement on the future investment plans for the commission in new technology.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Capital investment in new technology in the MSC for the financial years 1981-82 to 1984-85 is as follows.

For each of the financial years concerned 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and finally 1984-85 the figures are as follows:

Employment Division
1981-82	1,337,839

1982-83	5,810,478
1983-84	5,659,058
1984-85	4,232,000

The figures include expenditure on computers, telecommunications equipment and office machinery for 1981-82 to 1983-84 as published. The figures for 1984-85 are forecast expenditure in respect of the new skillcentre training agency is included within the overall training division totals for 1981-82 to 1983-84. It has not proved possible to break the expenditure down below operating divisions but an indication of equipment provided is as follows:

Selkirk House: Word processors and micro-computers.

Moorfoot (Sheffield): Word processors, various micro-computers, on-line national vacancy system (NATVACS), many computer systems relating to payment of allowances and operation of programmes (TOPS mini and Spectrum).

MSC Regional Offices: Many computer systems relating to payment of allowances, operation of programmes, and circulation of vacancy information; various micro-computers.

MSC Area Offices: Many computer systems relating to payment of allowances and operation of programmes; various micro-computers.

MSC Large Companies Unit: Not yet operating a computer system but research is currently being conducted into implementing a suitable system in late 1985-86.

In addition, an electronic mail system links Selkirk house, Moorfoot and all regional and area offices. Future investment plans for the commission in new technology are currently being considered within the financial planning cycle.

WALES

Road Schemes

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the individual and total estimated cost of the following road schemes: A55 Bodelwyddan bypass, A55 Dwygyfylchi-Penmaenbach, A55 Llanfairfechan bypass, A55 Penmaenmawr bypass, A55 Glan Conwy-Conwy Morfa, A40 Pengawse Hill diversion, A40 Whitland bypass, A40 Treffgarne Rocks improvement, A48 Cross Hands Llanddarog bypass, A48 Chepstow inner relief road and bridge, A483 Ruabon bypass and Wynnstany link, A483 Newbridge bypass and Whitehurst link, A483 Gresford-Pulford bypass and A483 Chirk bypass; and when construction is due to begin in each case.

Mr Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

	Estimated Gross Cost £ million (November 1984 prices) (Land and works)	Current Provisional Start Date*

Local Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the rules imposed on Welsh local authorities in respect of their new and accumulated capital receipts, in each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86, and the most recent arrangements.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The degree of access to new and accumulated capital receipts in the local authority sector has been adjusted over the period since 1981-82 principally in order to secure a better match between the level of actual capital spending and the provision for such spending in the Government's plans. The precise rules applicable in each period are set out in the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure) Regulations and Amendment Regulations laid and approved by the House each year.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the budgeted expenditure increase, current expenditure, in each Welsh local authority in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85, showing the total increase between 1981-82 and 1984-85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The following table gives details of budgeted current expenditure of Welsh local authorities in each year 1981-82 to 1984-85. Comparisons between years are affected by changes in the national insurance surcharge contribution which was 3·5 per cent. in 1981-82 and 1982-83, 2·5 per cent. in 1983-84 and 1 per cent. in 1984-85. The budgeted figures for the individual years have not been adjusted to allow for these changes but the final column compares the adjusted 1981-82 figures with those for 1984-85.

EEC Anti-poverty Programme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money Wales has received from the earlier EEC anti-poverty programme; and if he will list the projects which benefited.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: One project in Wales, the south Wales anti-poverty action centre, was funded under the programme. A total of £291,382 was awarded over the period 1975-76 to 1980-81, of which 50 per cent. was reimbursed by the EC.

Coal Industry

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many Welsh employees of the National Coal Board have been dismissed in the last four weeks.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This is a matter for the National Coal Board.

NHS (Private Practice)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the statutory audit review of the management of private practice in the National Health Service in Wales has been completed; and what action he proposes to take as a consequence.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At my Department's request the NHS auditor for Wales has carried out in all nine district health authorities in Wales statutory audit reviews covering private practice, category II charges and travel and subsistence. His reports of these reviews have now been made to the Department and copies of each report sent by the Department to the chairman of the district health authority concerned for consideration by the authority and comment within a two-month period.

Responses from authorities indicating the action they are taking are being submitted to the Department which, together with the NHS auditor for Wales, is considering them. The Department and the statutory auditor will continue to monitor the action being taken by authorities on the reports until we are satisfied that the weaknesses identified have been remedied. The auditor will be checking on the actions taken during his next audit of each authority. In the light of the problems identified in these reports, in conjunction with my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health and after consultation with the medical profession, we will be issuing revised guidance to authorities on the management of private practice in the NHS.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Expenditure

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was, in real terms, the amount of public money spent on education in each of the last 10 years (a) in total and (b) divided by county in England.

Sir Keith Joseph: Total spending by central and local government in each of the last 10 years on those areas of education which are my responsibility was as follows:

*£ million

	Real terms
1974-75	13,676
1975-76	13,819
1976-77	13,698
1977-78	12,658
1978-79	12,662
1979-80	12,501
1980-81	12,868
1981-82	12,684
1982-83	12,811
1983-84	12,881

* 1983-84 = 100.

Expenditure divided by county in England could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ILEA (Pupil Origins)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of children in the Inner London Education Authority primary schools are of (a) United Kingdom and (b) non-United Kingdom ethnic origin.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

Science Teaching

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish a policy statement on science teaching in schools.

Sir Keith Joseph: "Science 5-16: A statement of policy" will be issued by the Department and by the Welsh Office tomorrow. The statement identifies principles for school science education and points to the need for action within the resources available by schools, local education authorities, curriculum developers, teacher training institutions, examining bodies and the Secondary Examinations Council. I hope that the statement of policy will be welcomed by all who are concerned to improve science education in our schools.

PRIME MINISTER

Teachers (Pay)

Q11. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

The Prime Minister: The teachers' panel of the Burnham primary and secondary committee has rejected a 4 per cent. pay offer, refused arbitration and withdrawn from discussions on the reform of teachers' pay structure, conditions of service and appraisal. The two largest teacher unions are prosecuting an unrealistic claim for £1,200 a year for all teachers by means of industrial action. I greatly regret the resulting damage to children's education and deplore the readiness of these unions to subordinate the interests of the pupils in their charge to the pay aspirations of their members.

Fraserburgh

Q25. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Fraserburgh.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Malaysia and the Far East (Visit)

Q68. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will now provide details of her forthcoming visit to Malaysia and the far east.

The Prime Minister: As has already been announced, I shall be visiting Malaysia, Singapore, Brunei, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and India during the Easter recess from 4 to 13 April.

Confectionery Industry

Q88. Mr. Gregory asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about Government support for the United Kingdom confectionery industry.

The Prime Minister: I recognise the importance of the confectionery industry to the economy and its valuable contribution from rising exports. The Government's policies are designed to provide the economic conditions to help industry as a whole become more competitive and increase its sales.

Confectionery manufacturers are eligible to apply for assistance under the full range of Government schemes designed to aid industry. Help for exporters is available from the British Overseas Trade Board and from Food from Britain, whose current export marketing plan includes sugar and chocolate confectionery as priority products.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister what is the average number of civil servants available to deal with the day-to-day work of each of her Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The average number of civil servants in private offices who are available to deal with the day-to-day work of each of Her Majesty's Ministers, Law Officers and Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State is 10.5. I and the staff of my office are included in the calculation of this average.

Crime and Vandalism

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the present level of crime and vandalism in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales in 1984 were published by the Home Office on 12 March. They show increases over 1983 of 8 per cent. overall and of 12 per cent. in offences of criminal damage. These figures are disappointing: The Government will continue to give full support to the police and other agencies engaged in combating crime, but these efforts also require full backing from the public.

Criminal statistics for 1984 for Scotland are not yet available, but those for Northern Ireland show an increase over 1983 of 4 per cent. overall, with a decrease of 3 per cent. in offences of criminal damage.

Ethiopia (Services Relief Force)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Prime Minister if she will allow the Royal Air Force and Army famine relief force to stay and work in Ethiopia after their current tour of duty ends at the end of March.

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue the RAF's operation after the end of March, if the Ethiopian authorities agree. I cannot say how long we shall stay, but we have told the Ethiopians that we would be prepared, in any case, to give one month's notice of any intention to withdraw. We need to assess changing estimates of the need for this operation and its usefulness, and the help other donors might give.

Engagements

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 21 March.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 21 March.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 21 March.

Mr. Eggar asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Inflation

Mr. White asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a table giving the rate of inflation for each year since 1970.

The Prime Minister: The annual increase in the retail prices index for each year since 1970 is given in the following table:

Year	Increase in retail prices index (per cent.)
1970	6·4
1971	9·4
1972	7·1
1973	9·2
1974	16·1

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Sir Philip Holland asked the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report the executive non-departmental public bodies that have been the subject of overall reviews in accordance with the requirement set out in section 7 of the "Non-departmental Public Bodies: A Guide for Departments" since January 1982; and if she will make a statement on the progress to date.

The Prime Minister: The executive bodies reviewed since 1982 are as follows.

Since the review arrangements described in the present guidance to Departments were introduced in 1979 we have substantially reduced the number of all kinds of non-departmental bodies, with corresponding savings in public expenditure. We shall continue to keep the justification for such bodies under review. But we are now putting even greater emphasis on getting better value for money from such bodies. I announced on 19 November last year a new programme of reviews aimed at progressively improving the management and performance of non-departmental bodies. Revised guidance, incorporating these new arrangements, will be published later this year.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Prime Minister what consideration she has given to the introduction of sunset legislation for all advisory non-departmental public bodies; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Advisory non-departmental public bodies are normally set up by administrative action, though legislation may be used where, exceptionally, an advisory body's activities will involve significant continued government funding. The number of advisory bodies has been reduced from 1,485 in April 1979 to 1,087 in April 1984. Current arrangements provide for the continued justification for all advisory non-departmental public bodies to be reviewed on a three-yearly cycle. In the circumstances, I do not consider that to require legislation to provide for a finite life span for all advisory non-departmental public bodies, subject to renewal by Parliament, would provide sufficient additional benefit to justify the use of parliamentary time.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any plans as part of their present policy of reducing the number of non-departmental public bodies to abolish the Commission for Racial Equality, the Community Projects Foundation, the consumer councils, the development corporations, the Equal Opportunities Commission, the industrial training boards, and the research councils; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to my hon. Friend shortly.

Mr. Peter Levene

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister (1) when Her Majesty's Government first became aware that a certificate of qualification was required for Mr. Peter Levene to be employed as Chief of Defence Procurement;

(2) what criteria would have to be satisfied by Mr. Peter Levene before a certificate of qualification was issued for his appointment as Chief of Defence Procurement;

(3) whether the Civil Service Commissioners considered if a certificate of qualification could be granted to Mr. Peter Levene.

The Prime Minister: As explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 18 March, at column 366, having regard to all the circumstances, the Civil Service commissioners were satisfied that it was desirable that Mr. Levene's appointment, which is for a period not exceeding five years, should proceed without the issue of a certificate of qualification, under the provision of article 1(2)(g) of the Civil Service Order in Council 1982.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister (1) on what date Her Majesty's Government first consulted the Civil Service Commissioners about the appointment of Mr. Peter Levene;

(2) when Her Majesty's Government first became aware that a secondment was required if Mr. Peter Levene was to become Chief of Defence Procurement; and from which organisation Mr. Peter Levene was to be seconded;

(3) what is the total yearly sum payable to Mr. Peter Levene, including payments for pension, in his new post as Chief of Defence Procurement;

(4) when the contract with Mr. Peter Levene as Chief of Defence Procurement was finalised; and why it is difficult, if not impossible to undo;

(5) what are the terms of compensation payable to Mr. Peter Levene in his post of Chief of Defence Procurement if his appointment is terminated prior to its completion;

(6) what is the minimum length of the contract between Mr. Peter Levene and Her Majesty's Government;

(7) when she expects to announce the final terms and conditions of Mr. Peter Levene's appointment as Chief of Defence Procurement;

(8) why no mention was made of secondment when the appointment of Mr. Peter Levene was announced on 19 December.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 18 March, at column 366.

The First Civil Service Commissioner was consulted about Mr. Levene's appointment on 18 December last. When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced the appointment on 19 December, he made it clear that its precise terms were still under discussion with the commission. Although at that stage a secondment was envisaged, no final decisions had been taken on its exact nature or from which organisation it might be arranged, other than that Mr. Levene would not be seconded from United Scientific Holdings. No mention of secondment was included in the announcement on 19 December because the detailed arrangements had yet to be decided.

Mr. Levene received his letter of appointment and began work on 19 March. He was appointed under a fixed-term contract which may be terminated by 12 months' notice in writing by either party and which has a maximum duration of five years, in accordance with paragraph 1(2)(g) of the Civil Service Order in Council 1982. If the appointment is terminated prior to its completion, Mr. Levene could be eligible to receive up to 12 months' pay in lieu of notice depending on the circumstances at the time.

Mr. Levene will receive an initial annual salary of £95,000. This will be subject to the same pay award percentage increases as those appropriate to permanent secretaries and on the same dates starting with the increase, if any, awarded with effect from 1 April 1986. In addition, pension contributions amounting to £12,500 a year will be paid by the Department on Mr. Levene's behalf. Mr. Levene has severed all connections with his former companies and divested himself of his shareholding in them.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister whether the proposed secondment of Mr. Peter Levene was to be from a company that enjoyed Ministry of Defence contracts.

The Prime Minister: No final decisions had been taken on the organisation from which Mr. Levene was to be seconded when the possibility of secondment was abandoned.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she was aware that the former company of Mr. Peter Levene was tendering for the Ministry of Defence contract for the new range of armoured personnel carriers at the time of his appointment as Chief of Defence Procurement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. Invitations to tender for the main production order for MCV 80 were issued in April 1984. Alvis, a subsidiary of United Scientific Holdings, is one of four contractors who have submitted bids. These are currently being evaluated.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she anticipates any conflict of interest in the appointment of Mr. Peter Levene as Chief of Defence Procurement and the award of contracts for the new range of armoured personnel carriers.

The Prime Minister: No. Special arrangements are being made within the Ministry of Defence to ensure that Mr. Levene will not be personally involved in this or any other contract award which might involve any conflict of interest with his former industrial interests.

Civil Service (Appointments)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister how many persons have been appointed to the Civil Service in each year since 1979 without the issue of a certificate of qualification under the provisions of article 1(2)(g) of the Order in Council 1982.

The Prime Minister: The number of persons whose appointment to the Civil Service was approved without the issue of a certificate of qualification under the provisions of 1(2)(g) of the Civil Service Order in Council 1982 and under the similar provisions of 1(2)(g) of its 1978 predecessor in each year since 1979 was as follows:

	Number
1979	*11
1980	5
1981	4
1982	8
1983	8
1984	2

* Excluding holders of scientific research fellowships and certain sandwich students.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to bring forward legislation on the export of live animals from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I have no such plans.

There is already extensive legislation to protect the welfare of animals for export, which implements requirements laid down in Community directives. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him yesterday, at column 511, in which I described some of these statutory provisions.

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he is making to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals report on the international transportation of live animals, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he plans any action in the light of it.

Mrs. Fenner: The society has sent me a copy of the report which it has presented to the EC Commission. I have advised the RSPCA that since it has placed the matter in the hands of the Commission, I propose to await the Commission's comments before commenting on the report. We will continue to implement the provisions of the Community directives protecting the welfare of animals in international transit. The society will know from meetings with me last summer and other extensive contacts with the Ministry that I do not accept its view either that we are failing to implement our Community obligations on exports, or that the society's trails of calf consignments have shown evidence of unnecessary suffering to the animals involved.

Farmed Deer

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what, in each of the last five years, was the number of farmed deer slaughtered (a) on farm and (b) in abattoirs in England and Wales.

Mrs. Fenner: This information is not collected by my Department. In its report on the welfare of farmed deer the Farm Animal Welfare Council records an estimate, made in 1983, that around 3,000 farmed deer were slaughtered annually in Great Britain. Deer are not normally slaughtered in abattoirs in England and Wales in any numbers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Soldiers (House Purchase)

Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether soldiers in the Republic of Ireland are permitted to purchase homes under the co-ownership scheme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes, providing applicants meet all of the conditions attaching to the scheme.

Domestic Fuel Prices

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the overall increase in the price of household coal, town gas and electricity for domestic consumers in the last five years in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: Figures supplied by the coal trade show that the price of group 3 bituminous coal increased by 67 per cent. This increase includes a surcharge imposed during the miners' strike.

The general purpose block tariffs—which apply to domestic consumers—for towns gas in Belfast increased by 58 per cent.

The price of electricity for domestic consumers increased by 21 per cent.

Gas Conversion (Safety)

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will meet representatives of the Liquefied Petroleum Gas Association regarding the safety aspects of conversion from town gas to liquid petroleum gas.

Dr. Boyson: I will arrange for my officials to meet representatives of the association.

Farmed Deer

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what, in each of the last five years, was the number of farmed deer slaughtered (a) on farm and (b) in abattoirs in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: There is no record of any commercial deer farming, and no deer have been slaughtered in slaughterhouses.

EC Anti-poverty Programme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received from the earlier EEC anti-poverty programme; and if he will list the projects which benefited.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information obtained from the European Commission indicates that between 1975 and 1979 a total of £97,717 was paid as part of the programme of pilot schemes and studies to combat poverty in respect of projects in Northern Ireland. Projects benefiting from the programme covered research into the following:

—Belfast: areas of special social need —Voluntary organisations providing social services in Northern Ireland
—Belfast welfare rights.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer of 14 March, Official Report, columns 248-9, he will specify the offences alleged to have been committed by diplomats known to have been transferred from the United Kingdom followng representations by his Department in each year from 1982 to date.

Mr. Luce: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Argentina

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he transmitted to the Argentine Government the latest set of proposals for the re-establishment of confidence between Britain and Argentina; what was contained in the proposals; and if he has now received any reply.

Mr. Luce: The position remains as my right hon. and learned Friend explained to the House during the debate on the Falkland Islands (Foreign Affairs Committee Report) on 14 March at column 499. Details of our continuing exchanges with Argentina must for the time being remain confidential.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what countries he has consulted or expects to consult regarding the setting up of a multilaterally based conservation and management regime for the Falklands fisheries;

(2) if it is his intention that Argentina should be included in the proposed multilateral fishing regime for the Falklands.

Mr. Luce: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House during the debate on the Falkland Islands (Foreign Affairs Committee Report) on 14 March at columns 495-96, it would not be helpful to go into detail at this stage about our exploration of the possibility of the establishment of a multilaterally-based conservation and management regime for fisheries around the Falkland Islands. This is an important and complex matter which we need to pursue on a confidential basis.

British Air Space

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomatic representations protesting at intrusions by aircraft of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics into British air space have been made since the Government took office.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is not readily available but I will arrange for it to be published in the Official Report as soon as possible.

Trident

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Soviet Government were formally notified of Her Majesty's Government's decision to purchase the Trident missile system.

Mr. Luce: No. The then Secretary of State for Defence announced in Parliament on 15 July 1980 the Government's decision to acquire the Trident submarine-launched ballistic missile system. The background was fully set out in open Government documents 80/23 and 82/1.

Nuclear Test Ban

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to fulfil the obligations they accepted as a signatory of the partial test ban treaty and the non-proliferation treaty with regard to a nuclear test ban.

Mr. Luce: We continue to play a full part in relevant discussions at the Geneva conference on disarmament, where we have tabled two significant working papers on "Peaceful Nuclear Explosions" and "Verification Aspects of a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty". We and other Western delegations have also tabled at the conference on disarmament a draft mandate for a nuclear test ban ad hoc committee which would permit the examination of specific issues with a view to negotiation of a treaty on the subject. In addition, we are closely involved in the useful technical work performed by the ad hoc group of scientific experts appointed by the conference on disarmament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Department

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will update the figures given in reply to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving), Official Report, 1 May 1984, column 120, regarding the total additional cost to the Refreshment Department of the House of sitting from (a) 10.30 pm to midnight and (b) from midnight to 2 am; and if he will give similar estimates for such periods after 2 am as figures are conveniently available.

Mr. Beith: The estimated approximate additional cost of employing the necessary, hourly paid, staff of the Refreshment Department when the House sits from 10·30 pm to midnight is £75, from midnight to 2 am is £175 and from 2 am onwards is £77 per hour.

Police Services

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will estimate the average additional cost of police services in the House of the House sitting (a) from 10.30 pm to midnight, (b) from midnight to 2 am and (c) for such periods after 2 am as figures are conveniently available.

Mr. Beith: The information requested is as follows:

10.30 pm to midnight	£497 per hour
Midnight to 2 am	£662 per hour
2 am onwards	£331 per hour

Commission Staff

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the average number of staff employed by the Commission who are on duty in the House when it is sitting (a) from 10.30 pm to midnight, (b) from midnight to 2 am and (c) for such periods after 2 am as figures are conveniently available.

Mr. Beith: The information requested, in relation to each House Department and Mr. Speaker's Office, is as follows:

Mr. Speaker's Office: One, irrespective of time of rising of House.

Clerk's Department: 17, irrespective of time of rising of House.

Library Department: 14, irrespective of time of rising of House.

Official Report: 10.30 pm–midnight, 30; midnight–2 am, 22; 2 am onwards, 24.

Serjeant at Arms Department: 10.30 pm–midnight, 32; midnight–2 am, 24; 2 am onwards, 24.

Refreshment Department: 10.30 pm–midnight, 28; midnight–2 am, 24; 2 am onwards, 19.

Administration Department: Nil.

Written Answers

Mr. Dubs asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will introduce a standing order to provide that, when a day's sitting is lost, questions down for written answer for that day will automatically be transferred to the next sitting day.

Mr. Biffen: I propose to refer the hon. Gentleman's suggestion to the Procedure Committee for its consideration.

DEFENCE

Vacant Departmental Property

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the number of houses and flats, listed separately, owned by his Department, which have been unoccupied for more than six months but less than one year, between one and two years and more than two years, respectively.

Mr. Lee: Information is not held in the form requested. However, from statistics readily available the following table shows combined numbers of service houses and flats owned by this Department which have been vacant for more than six months and two years, and civilian houses and flats which have been vancant for more than six months.

	6 months	2 years
Service	4,224	1,749
Civilian	283	—

Of the service houses which have been vacant for two years or more 662 are being held against specific future requirements, 256 have already been passed to the PSA for disposal and 651 are surplus and disposal is being progressed. The requirement for the balance of 180 is under review.

The total stock of service quarters is 84,933.

HM Forces (Subsidies)

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether subsidies are received by members of Her Majesty's forces serving in the United States of America.

Mr. Lee: Members of Her Majesty's forces serving in the United States of America are paid, in addition to their military salary, a number of allowances to offset the essential extra costs which they incur in living and working in their overseas station compared with the United Kingdom. These allowances are kept under regular review. Deductions continue to be made from the salary of these personnel for appropriate charges, such as those for accommodation, which they would pay if they were stationed in the United Kingdom.

Hostel Accommodation

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much hostel accommodation is provided by his Department and at what cost, including any element of subsidy to fees charged.

Mr. Lee: Hostel accommodation is provided for Ministry of Defence staff at six establishments: AWRE Aldermaston, RAE Farnborough, RAE Aberporth, EQD Aquila, Met Office HQ Bracknell and Her Majesty's dockyard, Rosyth. These provide a total capacity for 953 residents. The latest information available — for the financial year 1983-84 — recorded expenditure of £1,370,678 and income of £1,058,147, representing a subsidy of £312,531.

Exercise Red Shoes

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to his Department's budget of Exercise Red Shoes.

Mr. Stanley: The cost of Exercise Red Shoes is subsumed within the total provision for training and is not separately identified.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much radioactive waste arises each year from military sources; and how these wastes are disposed of.

Mr. Butler: Very small quantities of liquid waste and airborne material are released to the environment. These are subject to restrictions agreed with the Department of the Environment or the Scottish Development Department. Annual releases are reported in DOE publication "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics (Radioactivity Additional Tables)." Disposal of low-level solid wastes is by shallow land burial either on site or using the national disposal service. Other solid wastes, which prior to 1983 were included in the United Kingdom sea disposal operation, are currently stored. It is not in the national interest to give details of the quantities of solid waste generated by Ministry of Defence programmes.

Anti-ballistic Missile System

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the feasibility of a European anti-ballistic missile system.

Mr. Butler: No consideration has been given to an independent European anti-ballistic missile system.

Trident

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the £700 million originally allocated for the missile processing facilities at Coulport was to come from the United Kingdom proportion of the Trident budget or the United States of America's proportion of the Trident budget.

Mr. Butler: The £700 million is the approximate saving at 1984-85 average prices and at an exchange rate of £1=$1·38 to the Trident budget of processing missiles at King's Bay instead of Coulport. Savings apply to both the United States and the United Kingdom components of the budget.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an up-to-date estimate of the total cost of purchase of the Trident missile system.

Mr. Butler: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Members for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang), for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) and for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 29 January, at columns 134-37. The estimated cost of Trident is £9,285 million at average 1984-85 prices and at an exchange rate of £1=$1·38.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the communications and satellite missile guidance facilities necessary for the deployment of the Trident missile will be under the operational control of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Butler: The facilities necessary for communicating with submarines of the United Kingdom Trident force and other facilities that are essential to the effective operation of the force will be under the operational control of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the proposed Trident missile force for the United Kingdom represents an escalation in nuclear capability compared with the present Polaris force, in terms of total megatonnage, targeting and accuracy.

Mr. Butler: In comparison to Polaris, the United Kingdom Trident force will provide an enhanced capability to the extent necessary to maintain an effective deterrent in the face of Soviet ABM defensive capabilities as they are modernised and improved. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to discuss the detailed capabilities of our nuclear weapons systems.

Military Research and Development

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps have been taken to ensure a greater share of spin-off arising from military research and development in the civil sector;

(2) if he will make a statement on what steps he is taking to ensure the transfer of technology from the defence industry to civil production.

Mr. Butler: While the primary purpose of defence research must be to meet defence requirements, the importance of identifying and exploiting ideas with commercial application is fully recognised. Work carried out in the defence research establishments is published where possible. Reports on defence work carried out in the establishments and elsewhere are collected and disseminated by the Defence research information centre. It is also part of the role of Ministry of Defence patents officers to identify advances which need to be patented in the interests of protection or exploitation. Advances which are considered to have civil potential are offered to the British Technology Group. There is also a regular exchange of ideas with industry through normal contacts between the research establishments and companies. With a view to enhancing exploitation further, agreement has been reached for the establishment of a private sector company called Defence Technology Enterprises Limited for the specific purpose of identifying and exploiting spin-off opportunities in the defence research establishments. The company is now in the process of working up its organisation and procedures.

Following the Secretary of State's instructions that encouragement should be given to obtaining the maximum exploitation of spin-off from new technology generated within industry under MOD-funded extramural contracts, the Ministry's contracts staff have entered into discussions with the Confederation of British Industries to examine ways of implementing those instructions to the full.

Nuclear Tests (Compensation)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence what factors are causing delays in resolving the question of compensation for ex-service men and widows of service men who were injured or damaged as a result of British nuclear tests in the Pacific; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: The Government have no evidence that injury or harm was caused to those involved in the British nuclear test programme in the Pacific. The question of compensation does not therefore arise. The result of the National Radiological Protection Board study of the health experience of test participants is expected to be available in late 1986, and the Government will review their position in the light of the board's report.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department asked the National Radiological Protection Board to study the records of service men and others who took part in British nuclear tests in the Pacific; why his Department has not released the medical records of those involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: Examination of the service records, in co-operation with the National Radiological Protection Board, to establish who participated in the British atmospheric nuclear test programmes in the Pacific and in Australia has been under way since the study was commissioned in October 1983. No information from the service medical records is required by NRPB, which will obtain the necessary mortality and morbidity data from Department of Health and Social Security sources.

Married Quarters

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of subsidies in the married quarter charges made to the United States Air Force.

Mr. Lee: The reduction in such charges which took effect from 1 October 1983 will amount to about £1 million in 1984-85.

Vessels (Safety Precautions)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place regarding safety precautions in relation to possible incidents involving submarines and surface vessels.

Mr. Lee: As I said in response to a question from the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 12 February at column 140, procedures relating to the movement of submarines in the waters around the British Isles are kept under regular review.

Cruise Missile Convoys

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received about cruise missile convoys exercising off base.

Mr. Stanley: The Ministry of Defence has received 45 letters on this subject from Members of Parliament and members of the public since cruise missiles were deployed at RAF Greenham Common at the end of 1983.

Saxon Vehicle

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original requirement for the Saxon vehicle; what is the present planned provision of Saxon, naming the units to which it will be deployed; how many have been deployed; what is the time scale for the deployment of the remainder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: Saxon was selected to provide a wheeled armoured personnel carrier for infantry battalions in 19 and 24 Infantry Brigades with a role in reinforcing 1 (BR) Corps, the battalions of the United Kingdom Mobile Force (Land) and the supporting troops of the formations to which they belong. Current plans envisage the provision of approximately 500 Saxon, of which some 70 have been deployed. Issue of the remainder is expected to run until 1987-88. Decisions on further purchases will depend on priorities across the defence budget.

Nuclear Tests (Servicemen)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the subject of the possible effects of nuclear irradiation on British servicemen who took part in nuclear tests in the 1950s and 1960s from the British Legion, the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association, and other such organisations and individuals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: Whilst I have not received representations from the Royal British Legion or the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association, I and my predecessors have received numerous representations from the British Nuclear Test Veterans' Association as well as from individuals on various aspects of the British nuclear test programme. Many claim that the illnesses they are now suffering are due to their having been exposed to ionising radiation during the trials. The aim of the study which the Ministry of Defence has commissioned from the National Radiological Protection Board is to show whether the health of participants has been disadvantaged in any way as a result of their involvement in the trials programme. The study is expected to be complete by autumn 1986. As I have explained in the note, which I enclosed with my letter of 6 December 1984 to all Members of Parliament, the radiological safety precautions taken during the trials were such that of the participants the vast majority experienced only negligible exposure to radiation and none should have suffered harm.

Radar

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied with Western radar facilities in the area north of Scotland.

Mr. Butler: The entire network of United Kingdom air defence radars is being modernised. This improved system, together with other NATO radars in Norway and Iceland and supplemented by information from airborne early warning forces, will substantially enhance radar coverage to the north of Scotland.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals or requests he has now received regarding the use of Mount Pleasant airport for civilian purposes; and what action he has taken;

(2) if he will give details of the arrangements for the cost of using the Mount Pleasant airport for civil purposes and for civilian use of military flights to Mount Pleasant.

Mr. Stanley: The use of Mount Pleasant airport for civilian purposes together with the costs of such use, including that of civilian use of military flights, is currently under consideration with the civil and military commissioners in the island and with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The arrangements are still being finalised. I also refer the hon. Member to his reply from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 30 January at column 202.

Submarine Communications

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest situation regarding examination of possible sites for the erection of an extremely low frequency system for submarine communications; what bodies have been consulted about this proposal; what medical advice has been sought; and when he expects to make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement said in reply to a question by the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 19 March 1985 at column 436, consideration of this proposal is at an early stage. So far the only body consulted is the CEGB, but should a suitable site be identified, and if we decide to proceed with an ELF communications system, we shall carry out the usual consultations with the local planning authority for the area in which the chosen site is located. The Ministry of Defence's medical advisers keep abreast of all scientific and medical advice in this field.

I shall inform the House in due course if we do eventually decide to build an ELF transmitter in the United Kingdom.

RAF Basic Trainer

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to announce the award of the contract for the Royal Air Force basic trainer.

Mr. Butler: The hon. Gentleman will be aware of the statement made earlier today by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what criteria he will use to decide on the award of the contract of the Royal Air Force basic trainer;

(2) what are the employment implications in each case in relation to the competing tenders for the Royal Air Force basic trainer.

Mr. Butler: I have nothing to add to the statement made earlier today by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from Pratt and Whitney regarding location of an aero-engine unit at Prestwick should the Royal Air Force basic trainer contract be awarded to British Aerospace.

Mr. Butler: I was told by Pratt and Whitney of Canada that it would set up an engine maintenance and overhaul facility at Prestwick, should a Pratt and Whitney engine be selected for the new RAF basic trainer. The firm also made it clear that, if its engine was not selected, there would nevertheless remain the possibility of the facility being located in the United Kingdom.

Military Facilities (US Forces)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list any new facilities which are currently under consideration for use by the United States forces in Scotland;

(2) if he will list the locations where existing facilities made available to the United States forces have been extended since 1980 in Scotland;

(3) if he will list the location of facilities made available to the United States forces in Scotland since 1980.

Mr. Lee: There are none.

Airspace Violations

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether British armed forces are placed on alert when Soviet military aircraft intrude into British airspace.

Mr. Stanley: As has been the case for many years and under successive Governments, certain RAF air defence aircraft based in the United Kingdom are held permanently at quick reaction alert in order to be able to intercept intrusions by unidentified aircraft and by Soviet military aircraft into the United Kingdom NATO air defence region, which includes United Kingdom national airspace.

Dockyard Disputes (Naval Ratings)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has examined the possible deployment of naval ratings in the event of industrial action by civilian staff at Rosyth and Plymouth Dockyards.

Mr. Lee: It is not our policy to discuss contingency plans in the event of industrial action.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his plans for the future management of the royal dockyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We wish to complete our present deliberations as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the final report prepared on the royal dockyards by his former personal adviser Mr. Peter Levene.

Mr. Lee: No. Mr. Levene's report and subsequent studies are part of the process of providing advice to Ministers.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the alternative report to that of Mr. Peter Levene prepared by the chief executive dockyards.

Mr. Lee: No such report exists although our present deliberations on the future arrangements for the dockyards are wide-ranging.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence manufacturers approached by Mr. Peter Levene with a view to their interest in running the royal dockyards were (a) shipbuilding and ship repair firms and (b) other manufacturing firms.

Mr. Lee: About three quarters of the firms in the defence industry sector approached by Mr. Levene are involved in the manufacture or repair of ships or their systems.

Anti-ship System (Highlands and Islands)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has at any time held discussions with the United States authorities for the installation of the ground launched anti-ship system in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Dockyards (Manpower)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his most recent estimates for the numbers of employees he expects at (a) Rosyth and (b) Plymouth dockyard in the current year and for the next three years.

Mr. Lee: The civilian manpower targets for 1 April 1985 at Rosyth and Devonport dockyards are 6,306 and 13,055, respectively. Decisions on targets for later years have not yet been taken.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate how many apprentices will be (a) recruited and (b) retained as full-time employees at Rosyth dockyard in the current year and for the next three years.

Mr. Lee: Discussions with the trades unions on the apprentice entry for the current year at Rosyth dockyard are still proceeding and final decisions have yet to be taken on the precise size of the intake and on the number of apprentices completing their training this year who will be offered employment.

As to future years, arrangements will be subject to discussions with the trades unions in the usual way nearer the time.

RFA Refits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence which refits, including Royal Fleet Auxilary vessels, originally earmarked for Rosyth dockyard, have been sent to private firms for refitting since February 1983; to which firms they have been sent; and at what cost to the defence budget.

Mr. Lee: No refits of Her Majesty's ships or Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels programmed to be undertaken at Rosyth have been sent to private firms in the period in question. Certain unprogrammed tasks of a lesser order of magnitude, and which in some cases have arisen at short notice, have, when economic capacity has not been available at Rosyth, been undertaken by contractors. The refit of a shock test vehicle which was to have been done commercially has recently been offered to Rosyth. Its capacity to undertake the necessary work is currently being assessed.

Armoured Personnel Carriers

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is considering a tender from United Scientific Holdings or its associate company Alvis for the manufacture of a new range of armoured personnel carriers.

Mr. Butler: Alvis is one of four firms participating in competitive tendering for production of the Army's new MCV 80 vehicle. Tenders have been submitted to the Ministry of Defence and are now being assessed.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total value of his Department's contract for its new range of armoured personnel carriers.

Mr. Butler: It would not be appropriate to disclose an estimate of MCV 80 production contract values while competitive tenders are still being assessed.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the first orders of the contract for the new range of armoured personnel carriers will be placed.

Mr. Butler: Our intention is to let contracts for MCV 80 production in mid-1985.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects subsequent orders for the new range of armoured personnel carriers to be placed.

Mr. Butler: A decision whether to let contracts this summer for all or only a part of the total requirement will be taken only when competitive tenders have been fully assessed.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the new Chief of Defence Procurement in the examination of tenders for the initial, and subsequent, contracts to manufacture the new range of armoured personnel carriers.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now give details of the aims and scope of Exercise Brave Defender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Brave Defender is a national military home defence exercise. The aims of the exercise are to test plans and procedures for the ground defence of vital establishments; liaison between the military and civil authorities over military home defence matters; and, to demonstrate the Government's commitment to home defence. It is planned that about 65,000 service men, both regular and reservist, who would have a home defence role on mobilisation will take part. The Territorial Army, including the home service force, will have an important role to play in the exercise. There will also be some US forces involved in the exercise.

The exercise, which comprises two phases and a preparatory period is scheduled for 2 to 13 September 1985. It will take place in various locations around Great Britain, and will test the revised home defence plans described in paragraph 413 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984" (Cmnd. 9227).

The first phase consists of practice mobilisation of home defence forces and their deployment to the installations they are to defend.

A representative selection of installations will be chosen as key points for exercise purposes. The second phase will involve guarding a variety of installations, practising defending them against simulated attack and forming mobile reaction forces. The installations used in the exercise will not necessarily be actual key points, information about which is classified. Enemy forces will be drawn from units with roles outside the United Kingdom and will include a small element from BAOR.

Where possible and realistic, all exercise activity will be confined to Ministry of Defence land and training areas, but it will be necessary to use some private land. Appropriate arrangements will be made with the landowners concerned. Whilst inevitably there will be greater than average military movement during the exercise, every effort will be made to minimise inconvenience to the public.

Details of the locations to be used in the exercise have yet to be finalised, but hon. Members in whose constituencies the exercise will take place will in due course be receiving an invitation to attend.

ENERGY

Coal (Polish Imports)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the amount of coal, in tonnes, and its value, imported from Poland during the whole calendar year commencing from the beginning of the miners' strike in 1984; and how these figures compare with the corresponding period of the previous year.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on coal imports on 13 November 1984 at column 167.

Sizewell Inquiry

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the length of the Sizewell inquiry; and what the total cost will be to the taxpayer.

Mr. Goodlad: The inquiry opened on 11 January 1983 and closed on 7 March 1985. Costs up to 28 February 1985 falling to my Department were some £517,000. Other costs incurred to the same date in running the inquiry and recoverable from the CEGB by agreement with the board total approximately £1,825,000. Costs incurred by parties to the inquiry, including the CEGB's own costs, are a matter for them and are not included in this total.

European Community (Energy Prices)

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on trends in comparative industrial energy prices in the member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The latest available information on trends in comparative industrial energy prices, covering most of the member states of the European Economic Community, is contained in "European Industrial Energy Prices, September/October 1984," published by the CBI in February, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Liquefied Petroleum Gas Industry

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Energy what measures are taken by his Department to encourage the growth of the liquefied petroleum gas industry.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The production of petroleum gases in the United Kingdom and from its continental shelf has increased rapidly in recent years under the United Kingdom's petroleum licensing and fiscal regimes. I neither control the prices of liquefied petroleum nor restrict the industry's commercial opportunities. My Department performs within the Government the normal duties of industrial sponsorship in relation to the liquefied petroleum gas industry.

Energy Prices

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the overall increase in the price of coal, gas and electricity for domestic consumers in England, Scotland and Wales in the last five years.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The price indices for domestic coal, gas and electricity are components of the general index of retail prices. Between 1980 and 1984, the latest period for which data are available, the index for coal increased by 44·7 per cent., that for gas by 82·3 per cent. and that for electricity by 38·7 per cent. The retail price index increased by 33·4 per cent. over the same period. However, between April 1983 and December 1984 when the RPI increased by 7·8 per cent. the indices for coal, gas and electricity rose by only 16·7 per cent., 4·2 per cent. and 2·1 per cent., respectively. Separate indices for England, Scotland and Wales are not readily available and could be derived only at disproportionate cost.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total cost of the National Coal Board's advertising campaign in the media during the recent coal mining strike;

(2) what was the total cost of individual mailings to miners by the National Coal Board during the mining dispute.

Mr. David Hunt: These are matters for the National Coal Board.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many occupational therapists were in post in the National Health Service in 1979; how that compares with the last year for which statistics are available; and if he will break the figures down by region;

(2) if he is satisfied with the present number of occupational therapists employed by the National Health Service;

(3) what proposals or evidence he has received suggesting that the number of National Health Service occupational therapists should be increased.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number in whole-time equivalents of occupational therapists employed in the NHS in England in 1979 was 2,528; that for 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, was 3,376, an increase of 34 per cent. The regional breakdown is shown in the table.

Figures for Scotland and Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales.

I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones), on 4 December 1984 at column 171 and to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 13 December 1984 at columns 591-592.

Housing Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will break down the figures for 1982-83 and 1983-84 in table 3.12.5 of Cmnd. 9428-II, public expenditure White Paper, showing how much of the expenditure paid to each category of beneficiary was attributable to housing benefit and distinguishing between rent rebates and rate rebates.

Mr. Whitney: The cost of housing benefit in 1982-83 and 1983-84 is estimated as follows*:

£ million

Broad groups of beneficiaries	1982-83† Rent rebates and allowances	Rate rebates	1983-84‡ Rent rebates and allowances	Rate rebates
Elderly	550	330	1,300	700

Care about Food Campaign

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the care about food campaign to encourage nurses to press for an improvement in the nutritional value of food provided within the National Health Service; and if he has any plans to respond to it.

Mr. John Patten: The Department was represented at the launch, on 13 March, of the nurses' care about food campaign. We have asked the organisers to keep us fully informed about its progress.

"Remedial Therapist" (Correspondence)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 13 March, if he has now replied to the editor of Remedial Therapist; and if he will publish in the Official Report the letter from the editor and his reply.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall be replying to the editor of Remedial Therapist shortly and will write to the right hon. Member when I have done so.

War Widows' Benefit

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are in receipt of war widows' benefit in Cornwall.

Mr. Whitney: Approximately 600.

AUT (Research Contracts)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he had with representatives of the Association of University Teachers before taking his decision to insert clauses in research contracts awarded by his Department limiting any salary revisions requested by contract holders to changes in the level of inflation and stipulating that applications for extra money for promotion or pay rises would have to be agreed with his Department.

Mr. John Patten: We have not inserted clauses in research contracts limiting revisions in salaries to changes in the level of inflation.

Agreements, in the main with universities, have for many years provided for research staff to be appointed on the normal terms and conditions of service for the university's or institution's own research staff. Estimates by researchers for expenditure each year are considered and a cash allocation agreed which takes account of past and expected pay increases. The Department's approval has naturally been required for any additional expenditure, whether it is for extra staff, changes such as promotion or other additional costs.

Dental Treatment

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the investigation which is presently being conducted into dentists' claims for providing dental treatment within the National Health Service to be concluded.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The committee of inquiry into unnecessary dental treatment, announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 5 December 1984 at column 217 is expected to report about the middle of this year.

Septic Abortion

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many discharges from hospital there were following diagnosis of septic abortion for each year since 1955.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available information is given in the table.

Estimated number of discharges (including deaths) from NHS hospitals in England and Wales with main diagnosis of septic abortion.

Abortions

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many injuries have occurred to resident and non-resident women as a result of abortion; what procedure was used; and how many weeks' gestation the women were in each year since 1968.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Figures for resident women only are published in table 4.2 (1974-1980) and table 17 (1981-1983) in "Abortion Statistics", copies of which are in the Library. The remaining information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Women (Pensions)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how the pension entitlement of women who worked only or mainly during the war years is calculated; what are the criteria for entitlement; and if he will give these greater publicity;

(2) how many women are receiving a pension in their own right based solely or mainly on the contributions they made whilst they were working during the war years; what is his estimate of the number who may be entitled to such a pension but have not claimed it; and what leaflets his Department publishes about the pension position of women, now over 60 years, who worked only or mainly during the war years.

Mr. Whitney: It is not possible to identify women receiving a retirement pension based wholly or mainly on wartime insurance. Entitlement to retirement pension depends on contributions paid over the contributor's working life. Contributions paid to insurance schemes in existence before 1948 may be counted for this purpose provided the insurance cover was live in 1948. When retirement pension is claimed any relevant contributions paid prior to 1948 are taken into account. There are no special leaflets on this subject but information on how the retirement pension is calculated, including pre-1948 insurance, is contained in leaflet NP 32 "Your Retirement Pension", obtainable from local offices of the Department.

Timothy Palliser

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Derby, South raising the case of Timothy Palliser, first sent to his office in May 1984 and on which an answer has repeatedly been promised and was expected last week.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member on 20 March, and regret the delay which has occurred in considering the difficult legal issue raised by this case.

Anti-Poverty Programme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the procedure for making bids to the EEC under its anti-poverty programme.

Mr. John Patten: Applications for financial assistance under this programme have to be forwarded to the Commission with the approval of member state Governments. Applications are being considered by the different parts of the United Kingdom separately and then forwarded to the Commission through this Department. As Scotland is not participating in this programme, no bids for projects in Scotland will be put forward to the Commission.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money England has received from the earlier EEC anti-poverty programme; and if he will list the projects which benefited.

Mr. John Patten: Information obtained from the European Commission indicates that the following amounts were received from the Community in respect of projects in England which participated in the earlier anti-poverty programme (1975 to 1980):

Seven Family Day Centre Projects in London and Liverpool	432,433
London Voluntary Service Council: Community Work Service	82,447
National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux: Tribunal Representation Unit, Wolverhampton	66,849
	581,729

In addition the United Kingdom as a whole received:

For participation in a cross national study on aspects of poverty in the United Kingdom, France and West Germany	171,100
For a national report on poverty in the United Kingdom	96,500
	849,329

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what safeguards he recommends to ensure that patients discharged from long-term institutional psychiatric or mental handicap care have an appropriate place to go to in the community.

Mr. John Patten: We expect health and local authorities to work together, with voluntary organisations where appropriate, in planning the transfer of patients from long-term hospital care in order to ensure that there is appropriate alternative provision available. Decisions on discharges are for those people directly responsible for clinical care and we expect them to assure themselves that sound arrangements have been made for a patient's accommodation and whatever continuing support is required before he or she leaves hospital.

Private Medicines (Abuse)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to identify and remedy private medicine abuses in the 155 district health authority areas other than the 37 chosen at random where audit reports have already been carried out.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I wrote to all health authority chairmen on 6 December 1984 about the importance of ensuring that arrangements for collecting income due to the National Health Service from private practice, overseas visitors and patients treated after road traffic accidents were operating effectively. All health authorities which were not already reviewing their arrangements were required to do so urgently, to take whatever corrective action might be necessary to conform with the relevant guidance without delay, and to ensure that all sums due are collected promptly and in full. Regional chairmen were asked to report to me by the end of this month on the adequacy of arrangements in their districts. We are also reviewing our guidance on the management of private practice, with a view to producing a consolidated revision so that all concerned understand what is required.

Industrial Dispute, Newcastle

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that all outstanding claims resulting from the industrial action at Newcastle have been settled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Some of the claims made during the period of industrial action have not yet been finally determined, but these are being cleared as quickly as possible. Where claims have not yet been settled in full, or normal payment methods cannot yet be restored, provisional payments and emergency payment arrangements are continuing as necessary.

Glue Ear

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have received treatment for glue ear in each of the last five years; and how many of these patients were children under 16 years of age in each of those years.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested. The available information for inpatients is given in the table.

Estimated number of inpatient cases treated in NHS hospitals in England and Wales with main diagnosis of chronic mucoid otitis media

Year	Estimated number
	Aged 0-14	15 and over	All ages
1979	4,800	210	5,010
1980	6,510	390	6,900
1981	7,290	540	7,830
1982	8,290	540	8,830

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his reasons for not including Mucolex or any similar product as a preparation which may be prescribed under his limited list proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Chief Medical Officer's group of independent medical and pharmaceutical experts advised us that all clinical needs were met by the selected list to be introduced on 1 April, and we accepted that advice.

Medical Manpower

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the advisory committee report on medical manpower; and how long he has been considering this report.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs Short) on 11 March at column 75.

Aids

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made a decision on the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984 provisions to be made available to help to control the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Public Health (Infectious Diseases) Regulations 1985 have been laid today and will come into effect tomorrow. These regulations will make the disease subject to certain provisions of the 1984 Act which already operate in respect of other infectious diseases. They are intended for use in very exceptional circumstances only. They will allow for medical examination, removal to hospital and detention there of patients in a dangerously infectious state and will be used if ever the necessity should arise. The regulations will also allow restrictions to be placed on the handling of bodies of AIDS sufferers.

I am satisfied that the authorities do not require any further new legal powers at the moment to protect the general public against the spread of the disease. We will however keep the legal position under review.

Sick Pay

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will institute a search of casepapers of supplementary benefit claimants in receipt of statutory sick pay back to April 1983, following the decision of the Social Security Commissioners case CSB 402/84;

(2) (a) what are the numbers of supplementary benefit claimants likely to be affected by the decision in the Social Security Commissioner's case CSB 402/84, (b) what are the estimated annual costs of applying the Commissioner's decision and (c) when he anticipates that the relevant paragraphs of the 'S' manual will be altered to take account of the decision.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1985, column 327.]: I understand that the Chief Adjudication Officer is seeking legal advice on whether to apply for leave to appeal from the Commissioner's decision. The question of what administrative action would be appropriate in respect of earlier cases is therefore for later consideration. We have, however, today laid before Parliament the Supplementary Benefit (Resources) Amendment Regulations so as to put beyond any doubt the original policy intention at the earliest opportunity.

Insufficient information is available to enable meaningful estimates to be made of the costs of applying the Commissioner's decision and of the number of claimants who might be affected by it.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Budget (Unemployment)

2. Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect his Budget proposals will have on reducing unemployment.

12. Mr. Boyes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of the Budget on the overall level of employment.

Mr. Lawson: I refer the hon. Members to the answers I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett).

45. Mr. Freud asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of his Budget proposals he estimates will be of most benefit to the unemployed.

Mr. Peter Rees: The maintenance of a firm anti-inflation strategy, coupled with measures to promote better operation of markets is of most benefit to the outlook for unemployment. Progress in reducing unemployment will depend crucially on moderation in pay settlements.

56. Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the likely effect of the Budget on the level of unemployment.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) earlier today.

Wages and Employment

6. Mr. Rogers asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has had concerning the Treasury paper on wages and employment.

Mr. Lawson: The Treasury paper, "Wages and Employment" has, rightly, attracted considerable attention.

Value Added Tax

17. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the number of representations he has received during the last 12 months from organisations expressing concern at the effect of value added tax on the amount charities are able to disburse to beneficiaries.

Mr. Moore: During the last 12 months my Treasury colleagues and I have received about 150 representations from individuals and organisations on this subject. My hon. Friend the Minister of State met a deputation from the Charities VAT Reform Group on 4 December.

40. Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals regarding value added tax are currently under discussion within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Hayhoe: The European Commission has admitted proposals for the following directives on value added tax to the Council of Ministers. In all cases, explanatory memoranda have been placed in the Library of the House:

A seventh directive, proposing a common system of VAT for works of art, collectors' items, antiques and used goods. (explanatory memoranda of 30 January 1978 and 30 October 1979;

A twelfth directive, on expenditure which is not eligible for deduction of VAT. (explanatory memoranda of 3 March 1983 and 4 April 1984);

A thirteenth directive, on arrangements for the refund of VAT to taxable persons not established in Community territory. (explanatory memorandum of 7 October 1982);

A fourteenth directive, on a system for deferred payment of the tax payable on importation by taxable persons. (explanatory memorandum of 15 September 1982);

A sixteenth directive, proposing a common scheme for relieving importations by private persons of used goods which have already borne VAT in their member state of origin. (explanatory memorandum of 28 September 1982);

A seventeenth directive, on exemption from VAT of temporary importations of goods. (explanatory memorandum of 24 October 1984);

An eighteenth directive, on the abolition of certain derogations provided for in article 28(3) of the sixth VAT Directive. (explanatory memorandum of 23 February 1985); and a nineteenth directive, to clarify certain ambiguities in the sixth VAT Directive. (explanatory memorandum of 23 February 1985). The eighteenth and nineteenth directives have not yet been discussed in the Council of Ministers.

A proposed twentieth directive is also under discussion, and was the subject of an explanatory memorandum of 23 August 1984. This proposes that the machinery of VAT administration should be used by the West German authorities as a channel for the payment of a special aid to their small farmers. However this is not, properly speaking, a VAT proposal.

47. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the European Commission's proposals for uniform value added tax rates throughout the Community.

Mr. Hayhoe: The European Commission has yet to make formal proposals to the Council of Ministers for common VAT rates in the Community.

59. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received on raising the threshold of value added tax.

Mr. Hayhoe: About 40 such representations have been received since the last Budget.

Mr. Paul Volcker

18. Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to meet Paul Volcker, chairman of the United States Federal Reserve Bank, to discuss international financial matters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Finance Ministers and Central Bank governors next meet at the IMF Interim and Development Committee meetings on 17-19 April.

Family Income

19. Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the increase per week in net income for a one-earner, two-child family of spending the same sum on (a) a 1p cut in the standard rate of tax, (b) increasing personal allowances and (c) increasing child benefit.

Mr. Moore: For a one-earner, two-child family on average earnings, the percentage increases in net income would be as follows (a) 0·9 per cent., (b) 0·7 per cent. and (c) 2·4 per cent.

Inflation

20. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. Lawson: Over the 12 months to January 1985, the retail prices index increased by 5 per cent.

35. Mr. McNamara asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the consequences for inflation of the recent fall in the exchange rate and rise in interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There may well be a temporary upward movement in inflation, resulting from many factors, including the exchange rate, but the Government's financial policies should ensure a swift resumption in the downward trend.

44. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of the Budget on inflation.

Mr. Peter Rees: We estimate that the direct effect of the Budget measures on the retail prices index will increase it by ½ per cent. But downward pressure on inflation will be maintained through the medium-term financial strategy.

Infrastructure

21. Mr. Hayes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the level of both private and public investment in the infrastructure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: As I told my hon. Friend in answer to a similar question on 24 January, total capital investment in this country is already running at a record level. The recently published public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428), shows that the public sector is spending substantial sums on the nation's infrastructure.

Business Investment

22. Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding the trend in business investment.

Mr. Peter Rees: Surveys by the CBI and the Department of Trade and Industry indicate that 1984's all-time high for business investment of £20·7 billion in current prices is likely to be comfortably exceeded this year.

National Insurance and Income Tax

23. Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of his gross wage a single man earning £80 per week will pay in national insurance contributions and income tax, as a result of his Budget proposals.

Mr. Moore: 21·1 per cent., assuming that he is contracted in to the state earnings-related pension scheme; 19·9 per cent. if he is contracted out. Before the Budget, the percentages paid were 3·4 per cent. higher at 24·5 per cent. and 23·3 per cent. respectively.

Houseboats

24. Mr. Jessel asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances houseboats, whether moving or stationary, are treated by his Department as houses rather than boats in respect of (a) value added tax, (b) tax relief on interest on loans for purchase and (c) capital gains tax.

Mr. Moore: A houseboat is zero-rated for value added tax provided that it is designed or adapted for use solely as a place of permanent habitation and it has neither the means of self-propulsion nor is capable of being readily adapted for that purpose. If these conditions are not met or if it is used or held out as holiday accommodation, it is standard-rated.

For mortgage interest relief purposes a houseboat, whether moving or stationary, is treated like any other property provided it is designed or adapted for use as a place of permanent habitation.

For capital gains tax a houseboat will normally be an exempt assset, but if this is not the case, it may, exceptionally, qualify as a dwellinghouse.

Pound Sterling

25. Mr. Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the strength of the pound sterling as against the United States dollar.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received several communications regarding the sterling exchange rate against the dollar.

30. Mr. Janner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he plans to take to protect the value of the pound against the United States dollar.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government do not target the dollar's exchange rate against sterling. But we, together with our G5 partners, expressed in Washington on 17 January our commitment to work towards greater exchange market stability through prudent financial policies, supply side improvements and, as necessary, intervention in the foreign exchange markets.

Workplace Nurseries

26. Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had advocating fiscal policies to encourage the provision of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Moore: A total of 28 letters and representations have been received on this subject since 1 January 1985.

Exchange Rate

27. Mr. Randall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the effect of his Budget proposals on the exchange rate.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government's continuing commitment to defeating inflation and improving the supply performance of the economy will help maintain confidence in sterling.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the real exchange rate of the pound since the last quarter of 1976 to the latest available date against the deutschmark, French franc, United States dollar, yen and guilder.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Tax Bill

28. Mr. Ron Lewis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the total tax bill in 1985-86 is expected to be lower or higher than in 1984-85.

Mr. Moore: North sea tax receipts, and onshore corporation tax (reflecting the strong growth in profits in 1983 and 1984), are expected to rise sharply between the two years. Largely as a result, total taxes and national insurance contributions, including local authority rates, are forecast higher in real terms in 1985-86 than in 1984-85.

Petrol (Duty)

29. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the duty on the price of a gallon of four star petrol.

Mr. Hayhoe: Very few.

Interest Rates

21. Mr. Hirst asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I am confident that interest rates are currently sufficient to secure sound monetary conditions and to provide continued downward pressure on inflation. Interest rates will continue to be at whatever level is necessary for that purpose.

34. Mr. Barron asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the effect of his Budget proposals on the level of interest rates.

57. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the effect of his Budget on interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend made clear in his Budget speech, short-term interest rates will be held at the level needed to maintain monetary conditions that will continue to bring down inflation.

Occupational Pension Funds

32. Mr. Amess asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received from (a) managers of occupational pension funds and (b) members of occupational pension funds concerning the taxation of such funds.

Mr. Moore: We have received some 12,000 letters concerning possible changes in the present taxation treatment of pension provision, including the taxation of pension funds. The vast majority have been from members of occupational pension funds. Identifying letters from individual fund managers (even if they have made themselves known as such) could be undertaken only at disproportionate time and cost.

Government Borrowing

33. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount by which Government borrowing has been reduced since April 1979.

Mr. Peter Rees: The amount of net annual public sector borrowing has fallen from 5·4 per cent. of GDP in 1978-79 to about 3¼ per cent. in each of the past four years, and is estimated to fall to 2 per cent. in 1985-86.

Debt Rescheduling

36. Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with other Finance Ministers regarding current debt rescheduling operations in Central and South American countries and elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer regularly meet his foreign counterparts and debt rescheduling is often one of the topics discussed.

Average Industrial Wage (Income Tax)

37. Mr. Corbyn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of a worker's salary on an average industrial wage, was paid in income tax at the standard rate in May 1979, June 1983 and at March 1984.

Mr. Moore: Information is in the table. It is assumed that no tax reliefs or allowances other than the personal allowance are available.

Percentage of average manual earnings paid in income tax at:*

	Reduced rate Single	Basic rate	Total	Reduced rate Married	Basic rate	Total
1978-79	4·2	20·2	24·4	4·2	16·1	20·3
1979-80	3·5	19·1	22·6	3·5	15·4	18·9
1983-84	—	23·1	23·1	—	19·2	19·2
1984-85	—	22·8	22·8	—	18·6	18·6

* Financial year averages for male, full-time manual workers aged over 21.

Trident

38. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the cost of capital expenditure on Trident carried out in the United States is included in his estimate of capital expenditure contained in table 2.9 of the 1985 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Peter Rees: Table 2.9 of the 1985 public expenditure White Paper includes defence expenditure of a capital nature. This is based on an agreed NATO definition of spending on major capital procurement and construction works and as such it will include the capital costs of the Trident project. The majority of the work on Trident project will be carried out in the United Kingdom and Trident work is only a small component of the figures in table 2.9.

EC (Budget Rebate)

39. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the arrangements to ensure that the United Kingdom will receive its £600 million rebate from the EC in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Fontainebleau summit agreed that the money should be paid to the United Kingdom in 1985 and the Council has unanimously reaffirmed that commitment since. The exact method of financing is still under discussion.

Economic Activity

41. Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding further signs of an increase in economic activity.

Mr. Peter Rees: There have been many pointers to continuing increases in economic activity. GDP (output measure) grew by 1 per cent. beween the third and fourth quarters of 1984 and the volume of non-oil exports grew by 3½ per cent. in the three months to January on the previous three months. The latest CBI trends inquiry suggests continuing growth in manufacturing output. The DTI investment intentions survey suggests that business investment will grow substantially in 1985 comfortably to exceed 1984's record level.

Schedule D

42. Mr. Stern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the efficiency and speed of liaison between Her Majesty's inspectors and collectors of taxes in relation to tax due on assessments under schedule D.

Mr. Moore: The efforts that have been made to overcome liaison problems between inspectors and collectors of taxes have improved the efficiency and speed of operation of the present computerised collection system for schedule D tax. But some difficulties remain because the system is limited by its dependence on paper transmission between the two offices. To combat the problems we announced plans in 1984 to link tax districts direct to accounts offices by an on-line computer system: CODA. Work on CODA is well under way and a phased introduction is planned for the system beginning in 1987. In the short term the Inland Revenue is planning to introduce changes to the present computer system, which should improve the service to taxpayers.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

43. Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his intended public sector borrowing requirement for 1985-86 represents as a proportion of gross national product.

Mr. Peter Rees: 2 per cent. of GDP.

51. Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the level of the public sector borrowing requirement in the forthcoming year.

Mr. Peter Rees: Several Budget representations contained views about the 1985-86 public sector borrowing requirement.

54. Mr. Bidwell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the public sector borrowing requirement outturn for 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement.

Exports

46. Mr. Nicholls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the economic recovery is affecting the levels of United Kingdom exports.

Mr. Peter Rees: The buoyancy of world trade in 1984 has been fully reflected in the growth of United Kingdom exports. The volume of world trade in manufactures is estimated to have grown by 10 per cent., and United Kingdom exports of manufactures, excluding the erratic items which tend to distort the underlying trend, grew by 11 per cent.

Economic Recovery

48. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the likely duration of the current recovery.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Budget forecast suggests continuation of a healthy rate of growth at least into 1986. On the basis of the forecast, economic growth will have averaged 2½ per cent. a year in the five years since the first half of 1981.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

49. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the report of the Bank of England committee into the lesson of Johnson Matthey Bankers collapse will be published.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The review is in progress. My right hon. Friend will report to the House when it is completed.

58. Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an up-to-date estimate of the loss to the Exchequer from the Bank of England's rescue of Johnson Matthey Bankers.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Any costs of the operaton will be met by the banking department of the Bank of England. There is no direct cost to the Exchequer.

Economic Growth

50. Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of the prospect for economic growth in the coming year.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Government's forecast published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report is for growth of 3½ per cent. in 1985.

Public Expenditure White Paper

52. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has estimated the number of jobs that will be lost as a result of the 1985 White Paper on public expenditure.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Government's public expenditure plans are an integral part of their policies to encourage a vigorous and enterprising economy, creating conditions for continuing and sustainable growth in employment.

Coal Industry Dispute

53. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the cost of the coal strike.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement on Tuesday 19 March 1985.

Productivity

55. Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the growth of productivity in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Rees: References to productivity have been made from time to time in correspondence. Manufacturing Productivity has grown on average by 6½ per cent. per annum in the past four years. Whole economy productivity rose 3 per cent. per annum between 1980 and 1983.

Taxation

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total saving of tax to (a) the wealthiest 5 per cent. and (b) the wealthiest 10 per cent. of the population in terms of (i) income and (ii) capital as a result of reductions made in income and capital taxes since 1979.

Mr. Moore: The following estimates have been calculated on the same basis as the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 14 February 1985, column 292. £2·6 billion of the income tax reductions are in respect of the 10 per cent. of taxpayers with the highest incomes. Of this, £2·1 billion is in respect of the top 5 per cent.

Virtually the whole of the reduction of £350 million in capital transfer tax accrues to the wealthiest 10 per cent. in terms of capital and all except about 1 per cent. of it to the wealthiest 5 per cent.

I regret that it is not possible to analyse the reductions of income tax on the basis of the distribution of wealth, of capital transfer tax on the basis of the income distribution, or the reduction of capital gains tax on either basis.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, for the last financial year, receipts of income tax, corporation tax and value added tax derived from Cumbria, Lancashire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester and Cheshire.

Mr. Moore: For counties, the available information on income tax is on amounts due rather than receipts.

Estimates for 1982-83 (the latest available) of that due from people resident in each of the five counties are as follows:

Amount of Income Tax

Area	£ million
Cumbria	267
Lancashire	903
Merseyside	768
Greater Manchester	890
Cheshire	711

Source: The Survey of Personal Incomes 1982-83

I regret that estimates of corporation tax and value added tax are not available.

Capital Investment

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the principles set down by the Treasury for the approval of public sector capital investment projects which propose to include some private sector capital.

Mr. Peter Rees: The criteria, devised in 1981, under which private finance might be introduced into public sector projects have recently been reviewed. The Government believe these criteria should continue to provide the basis for considering whether or not private finance might be appropriate on the facts of any particular case.

Holiday Flatlets (Tax Assessment)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to amend the Finance Act 1984 in such a way that, for the purposes of the assessment of tax of rent income, conference delegates are treated as holidaymakers when staying in holiday flatlets.

Mr. Moore: I have no plans to do so.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of extending mortgage interest tax relief of (a) £35,000 and (b) £40,000 under (i) the present tax arrangements and (ii) if the relief was limited to standard rate of income tax.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will construct an index, with 1978-79 equalling 100, of the changes in the level of income tax and national insurance contributions for each subsequent year for a taxpayer on (a) two thirds, (b) average, (c) five times average and (d) 10 times average earnings for households where the taxpayer is (i) single, (ii) married, (iii) married with two children and (iv) married with four children, and in all cases assuming that the wife does not work, in the manner of the answer of 23 November 1983, Official Report, columns 171-2.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Business Expansion Scheme

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the number of new jobs created by the business expansion scheme since its inception; and what is the cost of each new job created in this way.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Budget Statement

Mr. Canavan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has so far received in response to his Budget statement.

Mr. Lawson: None, so far.

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table comparable to chart 1.5 of Cmnd. 9428 showing percentage change in programmes between 1978-79 and 1987-88 but separating out the programmes for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the public expenditure planning total has risen or is planned to rise (a) as a whole, (b) in Scotland and (c) in the defence programme from 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Cunninghame District Council

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the increase in income from the rate poundage set by Cunninghame district council for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: The information is as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	0·438
1984-85	−0·457
1985-86	1·178

Note:

For the purposes of this question the income from the rate poundage in each year from 1982-83 is the amount produced by multiplying the authority's rate poundage and the product of a penny rate for each year as most recently notified by the authority to the Scottish Office.

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average council house rent of one, two, three and four apartment houses in Cunninghame district council; and how these figures compare with those for the other district councils in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Average annual local authority rents 30 September 1984

Number of apartments	Cunninghame £	Scotland £
1 or 2	436·12	460·44
3	454·55	532·89
4	471·54	600·13
5 or more	490·28	645·41
All dwellings	460·05	543·94

Rate Poundage (Strathclyde)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the increase in income from the rate poundage set by Strathclyde region for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: The information is as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	1·592
1984-85	28·533
1985-86	64·582

Note:

For the purposes of this question the income from the rate poundage in each year from 1982-83 is the amount produced by multiplying the authority's rate poundage and the product of a penny rate for each year as most recently notified by the authority to the Scottish Office.

Farmed Deer

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what, in each of the last five years, was the number of farmed deer slaughtered (a) on farm and (b) in abattoirs in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Information about the number of farmed deer slaughtered on farm is not collected by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. A limited trial of abbattoir slaughter of farmed deer has been taking place since 1982 in one abattoir in Scotland, in the course of which some 380 deer have been slaughtered.

Anti-Poverty Programme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why Scotland is now being excluded from the European anti-poverty programme.

Mr. Ancram: Given the limited size of the second European Commission anti-poverty programme, the likely share of EC resources available for projects in Scotland would have been extremely small. In these circumstances, because of the need to balance the United Kingdom's contribution to EC expenditure with other public expenditure within planned totals, and because no additional public expenditure resources could be made available to meet the required local contribution, there would have been little or no likelihood of projects being successful except at the expense of other priorities or programmes. Therefore, and after very careful consideration, my right hon. Friend and I concluded that the balance of advantage on this occasion lay in non-participation and in concentrating our available public expenditure resources upon existing identified priorities.

Many projects that might have been considered under the anti-poverty programme are of course likely to qualify for existing forms of support. In particular suitable projects can benefit from the 75 per cent. funding available through the urban programme for voluntary sector and local authority projects of direct benefit to deprived urban areas.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money Scotland has received from the earlier EC anti-poverty programme; and if he will list the projects which benefited.

Mr. Ancram: The total amount paid from the first EC anti-poverty programme in respect of projects in Scotland was £654,174.

The projects supported were as follows:

1. Craigmillar Festival Society, Edinburgh.
2. Social and Community Development Project, Edinburgh.
3. Govan Area Resource Centre, Glasgow.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the procedure for making bids from Scotland to the EC under its anti-poverty programme.

Mr. Ancram: Applications for financial assistance under the second EC programme to combat poverty have to be forwarded to the European Commission with the approval of member state Governments. As, however, the hon. Member is aware, it has been decided that the balance of advantage on this occasion does not favour Scotland's participation in the programme.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on his refusal to accept aid from the European anti-poverty programme;

(2) why he considers the second European Community programme to combat poverty not good value for money for Scotland, as he has written in a letter to the chief executive of Strathclyde;

(3) if he will list his reasons for writing to the chief executive of Strathclyde region rejecting the second European Community programme to combat poverty for Scotland and saying that the money directly from the EC would not be additional money.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I have given today to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang).

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider his decision to exclude Scotland from the second European Community programme to combat poverty.

Mr. Ancram: I see no reason to do so.

Commercial Ratepayers

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from commercial ratepayers facing increases in rates of more than 50 per cent. following revaluation.

Mr. Ancram: Though representative bodies have made general representations, I have not received any direct written representations from commerical ratepayers who have made it clear that they are in this position.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider introducing assistance to commercial ratepayers faced with increases in excess of 50 per cent. as a result of revaluation.

Mr. Ancram: No. There is no power under which such assistance by way of additional grant could be provided.

if any ratepayer believes his valuation to be excessive he has the opportunity to appeal against it and have that appeal considered by an independent valuation appeal committee. If a revaluation appeal is upheld the amended valuation would be effective from 1 April 1985.

Over 75-year-olds

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate on the basis of table 15.10.3 of "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", and adjusted for inflation, how much extra funds are required by 1988 to meet the health service needs of the additional numbers of over 75-year-olds in the population.

Mr. John MacKay: I estimate that the additional cost of providing health care services for the increasing number of those over 75 years old in the population in the three years 1985-86 to 1987-88 will be about £24 million, of which about £22 million will fall on the hospitals and community health services programme.

Assisted Scheme Awards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid out in (a) state assisted awards and (b) grants to private schools in each year since 1979; and what he estimates the cost of the state assisted scheme will be in each year from 1985-86 to 1987-88.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is as follows:

Further Education

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) full-time students and (b) full-time equivalent students attended (i) Scottish universities and (ii) colleges, further education colleges and central institutions in 1979 and 1984; and what is his estimate for the numbers in each category in 1988.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is given in the table. Projections of students in Scottish universities are not available for 1987-88.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update table 15.10.9 of "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", for the numbers of home helps, staff in day centres and in local authority residential centres for 1984.

Mr. John MacKay : The information requested is not yet available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update table 15.10.8 of "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme" for the number of places available in day nurseries, pre-school playgroups and day care centres, lunch clubs and meals on wheels for the elderly in 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: The following is the available information:

	Numbers
Places in day nurseries at 31 March 1984	3,983
Meals served in lunch clubs in year to 31 March 1984	1,972,000
Meals on Wheels served in year to 31 March 1984	1,826,000

All figures are provisional

Information on pre-school playgroups and day centres for the elderly for 1984 is not yet available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update table 15.10.5 of "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme" for the numbers of available beds in geriatric and acute hospitals and beds for the treatment of the mentally ill and mentally handicapped in 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that this information is not yet available nationally.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table, otherwise identical to page 51 of "Public Expenditure in 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scottish Programme", but expressed in (a) cost terms and (b) volume terms and showing percentage changes over 1978-79;

(2) if he will publish a table, otherwise identical to page 51 of "Public Expenditure in 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scottish Programme", but expressed in (a) cost terms and (b) volume terms.

Mr. Younger: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table, othewise identical to "Additional Analysis 5 of Public Expenditure in 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scottish Programme", but expressed in volume terms.

Mr. Younger: No. Comprehensive records are no longer kept of public expenditure in volume terms.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate how much the inter-year comparisons of table 1 of "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scottish Programme" are distorted by changes in functional and administrative arrangements, such as housing benefit, regional development grants and national insurance surcharge; and whether adjustments can be made to make the figures directly comparable.

Mr. Younger: The only such change which makes direct year-on-year compound comparisons difficult is the transfer of responsibility for regional development grants in Scotland to me from the Department of Trade and Industry. Including regional development grants for all years, past and planned expenditure on industry, energy, trade and employment within the Scotland programme, and on total expenditure within my responsibility would be as in the table.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what he estimates the central Government subsidy per local authority dwelling will be in 1985-86 calculated on the basis used in table 15.5.11 in "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme."

Mr. Younger: £57.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table, otherwise identical to the (a) health subsection and (b) social work subsection table on page 101 of "Public Expenditure in 1987-88: A Commentary on the Scottish Programme," but expressed in (i) cost terms and (ii) volume terms, and showing percentage changes over 1978-79.

Mr. John MacKay: Detailed records of past and planned expenditure by programme are no longer maintained in volume terms. The information requested about expenditure in cost terms is as follows, using GDP deflator factors consistent with those used for the analysis set out on page 131 of the 1985 Scottish Commentary. In the time available it has not been possible to provide figures in the detail shown in table 15.10.1 of the Commentary.

The percentage figures given above show the cumulative percentage increase over 1978-79 expenditure figures expressed in 1983-84 cost terms.

Health Visitors and Home Nurses

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) health visitors and (b) home nurses were employed in the Scottish health service in each year since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of health visitors and home nurses—now known as district nurses—(whole-time equivalent) employed in the Scottish Health Service each year since 1979 are as follows:

	Health visitors	District nurses
1979	1,266·9	1,610·8
1980	1,344·1	1,724·1
1981	1,359·8	1,732·4

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for local authority current expenditure for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88 expenditure both as an amount and as a percentage change over 1978-79 expressed in (a) cash, (b) volume and (c) cost terms.

Mr. Younger: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for local authority capital expenditure for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88 expenditure, both as an amount and as a percentage change over 1978-79 expressed in (a) cash, (b) volume and (c) cost terms.

Mr. Ancram: The information available is set out in the table. The information needed to construct volume figures is no longer available because Government planning is in cash terms.

1986-87	720	+35	630	−30
1987-88	770	+45	650	−28

Notes:

1. The figures are taken from the commentary on the Scotland programme to the public expenditure White paper (Cmnd. 9428). Those for 1978-79 to 1983-84 are actual expenditure, those for 1984-85 are estimated outturn and those for 1985-86 to 1987-88 are the Government's planned public expenditure provision. Figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are subject to review in the next public expenditure survey.

2. The figures in cost terms are adjusted to 1983-84 prices, using the GDP deflator.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in a table, otherwise identical to table 3.15.2 of Cmnd. 9428-II, but expressed in (a) cost terms and (b) volume terms.

Mr. Younger: Since public expenditure is now planned in cash, volume figures are no longer relevant and the information needed to construct them is no longer collected comprehensively. The information requested in cost terms is set out in the following table. For information on volume terms movements in local authority current expenditure as a whole, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply of today's date to his question by my hon. Friend the Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table, otherwise identical to table 3.15.1 of Cmnd. 9428-II, but expressed in (a) cost terms and (b) volume terms.

Mr. Younger: Since public expenditure is now planned in cash, volume figures are no longer relevant and the information needed to construct them is no longer collected comprehensively. The information requested in cost terms is set out in the following table.

Scotland Analysis by Broad Economic Category in Cost Terms (1983-84 Base Year)

Departmental Programmes

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the programmes or sub-programmes within his responsibility for which volume comparisons between 1984-85 to 1987-88 with 1978-79, or the nearest base year, are available and publish such comparisons in the Official Report.

Mr. Younger: None.

Service Sector Employment

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of people employed in the service sector in each of the last 10 years in Scotland, giving the change in each year as a percentage of the total employed in that sector;

(2) if he will list the number of people employed in the manufacturing industry in the last seven years in Scotland, giving the change in each year as a percentage of the total employed in that sector.

Mr. Younger: The estimated numbers of employees in employment in each of these sectors, as defined on the 1980 standard industrial classification, and the percentage changes from each previous year, are as follows:

	Manufacturing		Services
	Number in thousands	Percentage change	Number in thousands	Percentage change

1983	447	−6·5	1,231	−0·2
1984	437	−2·2	1,254	+1·9

Note:
The estimates for 1982, 1983 and 1984 are provisional.

Rents and Housing Benefit

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate on the basis of the rent increases announced for 1985-86 by Scottish local authorities (a) the average unrebated local authority rent in that year and (b) the percentage of council house tenants who will be in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Younger: Returns submitted to my Department by housing authorities suggest that the average standard unrebated council house rent in Scotland in 1985-86 will be approximately £600 per annum.

No estimates are available of the number of council house tenants who will qualify for housing benefit in 1985-86.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what he expects his Department to pay out in regional development grant in 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, respectively.

Mr. Younger: The expected outturn on regional development grant this year is £111·6 million, of which £70·6 million was paid from the Department of Trade and Industry Vote before I assumed responsibility for regional development grant in Scotland on 29 November 1984. The public expenditure survey provision for 1985-86 is £105 million. Estimates for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are subject to revision in the course of the annual public expenditure survey.

Rural Aid Fund

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has now received proposals from the joint working party in Strathclyde proposing the establishment of a rural aid fund, along similar lines to the urban aid programme; and when he intends to meet representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to follow up the proposed introduction of such a fund.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The proposals of the joint working party were submitted to my right hon. Friend on 1 March, and are being considered. We have had no approach on the matter from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Trunk Road Construction

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the major trunk road construction projects which have been started during 1984-85 and those which he expects to start in 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: The information is as follows:

Schemes with estimated cost over £1 million started since 1 April 1984

A1	—Musselburgh and Tranent Bypass, Stage II
M74	—Draffan to Millbank, Stage II
A75	—Creetown Bypass
A75	—Bridge of Dee Diversion*
A82	—Camus Nan Clais to Hollybank (Loch Lomand)*
A9	—Dalreoch to Burnside
(A92)	—East Fife Regional Road, Stage II
A972	—Kingsway (Dundee), Stage III

Schemes with estimated cost over £1 million expected to start by 31 March 1986

A7	—Synton to Mossend
M74	—Draffan to Millbank, Stage III
A830	—Kinsadel to Mallaig, Stage I
A835	—Contin River Bridge
A9	—Alness Diversion
A929	—Kingsway to Powrie
A94	—Forfar Bypass

Cash Blocks

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any changes to announce in the cash blocks SO/LA1 and SO/LA2 for 1984-85 which are within his responsibility.

Mr. Younger: Cash block SO/LA1 in 1984-85 is being reduced by £3·429 million. The limit for this block—which includes all Scottish local authority capital expenditure within my responsibility on services other than housing—was set at £391·117 million; the revised cash limit is now £387·688 million. This adjustment reflects the final outturn figure for the same block in 1983-84 which was overspent by £3·429 million or 0·9 per cent. of the revised SO/LA1 cash limit of £385·326 million for that year.

Cash block SO/LA2 is being reduced by £38·257 million. The limit for this cash block—which includes capital expenditure in Scotland on housing by local authorities, new towns, the Scottish Special Housing Association and on schemes financed by the Housing Corporation; and industrial and commercial investment by new towns—was set at £466·753 million for 1984-85. The revised cash limit is £428·496 million. This change comprises three separate reductions:

(i) £20·491 million under the housing expenditure limits arangement by which at the beginning of the year each local authority was set a limit for its contribution from its rate fund to its housing revenue account. Authorities were told that any excess above this limit would result in an equivalent reduction in their capital allocation. Regrettably 23 local authorities exceeded their limits and incurred consequent reductions in their capital allocations. The cash limit requires to be reduced accordingly by the aggregate excess.

(ii) £17·441 million in respect of an overspend on the cash block in 1983-84. An estimate of this overspend was taken into account in setting capital allocations for 1984-85 an no further adjustments to individual housing authorities' allocations are necessary.

(iii) £0·325 million to take account of supplementary provision required on the Class XV, 9 New Towns, Scotland Vote.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Afghan Aid

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government intend to give to the recently formed charitable trust Afghan Aid.

Mr. Raison: I propose to allocate a grant in aid of £50,000 to Afghan aid as relief for destitute Afghan refugees, wherever they might be, who have had to leave their homes because of the fighting in Afghanistan.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Temporary Visitors

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the last year of reported statistics, what number of visitors from the Asian sub-continent were admitted as temporary visitors, married British citizens during their temporary stay, and were then allowed to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information is that about 340 husbands and 470 wives from the Indian sub-continent who had been admitted for a limited period other than as a husband or fiancé(e) were accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in 1984; their admission may have been as visitors, students or in some other category given limited leave to enter; the figure for wives excludes those accepted for settlement on the removal of conditions applying to their husbands.

Arrests (Transport Costs)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times in the past six months people who have been arrested have been flown at taxpayers' expense to another part of the United Kingdom; and what was the size of the resultant fine or sentence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Radios

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce a licence fee for radios generally.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria and procedures are applied in making appointments to the Equal Opportunities Commission, and at a senior level within the staffing structure of the commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Members of the Equal Opportunities Commission are appointed by my right hon. and learned Friend in accordance with the terms of section 53 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. They are chosen for their personal qualities and for their general knowledge and experience of the areas covered by equal opportunity legislation. Under the terms of schedule 3 of the 1975 Act, the commission is responsible for appointing its own staff. I understand that, in accordance with a local agreement, the normal procedure is for all vacancies to be advertised internally before any consideration is given to a candidate from outside the commission; but some specialist appointments and the post of chief executive have been advertised simultaneously both inside and outside the commission.

Police and Fire Services (GREAs)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his intention to reduce in real terms the grant-related expenditure assessments of the West Yorkshire or any other metropolitan police and fire services over the three-year period of financial controls over the joint boards for these services, which will be established in the event of the abolition of the metropolitan counties and the Greater London council.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is no intention to fix the grant-related expenditure assessments for police and fire joint boards other than in accordance with the general principles governing such assessments for all police and fire authorities.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the amount of mutual aid sent by the Metropolitan police to other forces by month during the course of the miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1985, c. 161]: The information requested is as follows:

Number of Metropolitan Police officers sent on mutual aid duties in connection with the miners' dispute in each month since March 1984.

	Number
March 1984	2,553
April	3,105
May	2,006
June	1,735
July	5,360
August	4,365
September	7,695
October	5,162
November	3,461
December	1,977
January 1985	1,419
February	1,846
March	47

The periods of duty involved ranged from one day to eight days.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fishing Boats (EC Grants)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what checks are carried out by his Department in respect of eligibility for European Economic Community grants towards the purchase of new fishing boats as to (a) the authenticity of applicants and (b) the extent to which bona fide applicants meet the conditions of eligibility;

(2) if he will list the conditions governing the eligibility of owners of fishing boats in Northern Ireland for grants from the European Economic Community towards the cost of purchasing new fishing boats.

Dr. Boyson: Grant is available under regulation (EEC) No. 2908/83 which was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 22 October 1983; article 10 refers to conditions for owners. Applications are processed by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and any necessary inquiries are made by the sea fisheries inspectorate.

River Blackwater (Drainage Works)

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Department of Agriculture (Northern Ireland) drainage division's proposals to carry out drainage works on the River Blackwater, County Tyrone and County Armagh, have received approval; under what statutory authority the scheme is being carried out; what are the total estimated costs of the scheme; how much money the Government will contribute towards the costs of the scheme; what financial benefit they expect to accrue as a result of the investment of public money in this scheme; what area of land they estimate will benefit from the scheme by becoming available for agricultural production, or by being converted from its existing agricultural use to more intensive agricultural use; what are the results of any cost-benefit analysis carried out into this scheme; when he expects the scheme to be completed; and whether a full environmental assessment was made into the impact of the scheme upon wildlife and landscape.

Dr. Boyson: This scheme was approved in August 1982; it is being carried out under the Drainage (Northern Ireland) Order 1973. The total estimated cost is £19 million at 1984 prices and the net cost after deducting European Community grant and the Republic of Ireland's contribution is approximately £13 million. Benefits expected include more efficient production by farmers, alleviation of road flooding at 21 points and the provision of over 200 jobs during the construction period of five years; an estimated 3,200 hectares of agricultural land in Northern Ireland will benefit. Using 1984 costs the cost benefit assessment of the scheme produces an internal rate of return in excess of 5 per cent. The scheme is expected to be completed in 1989; an assessment of its environmental impact was made before works started.

"Developing Hospital Services"

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of commissioning and compiling the report "Developing Hospital Services", by the joint review team of the Eastern Health and Social Servies Board, taking into account wage costs for staff servicing the review team, the expenses of members of the team, clerical overheads in servicing the committee and all other expenses incurred by the review team in its work.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of printing, distributing and delivering the report, "Developing Hospital Services", by the joint review team of the Eastern Health and Social Services Board.

Mr. Chris Patten: Approximately £13,800.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of preparing, printing, distributing and delivering the supplementary briefing document for the public on the report, "Developing Hospital Services," by the joint review team of the Eastern Health and Social Services Board.

Mr. Chris Patten: The total cost of printing and distributing the short guide to the report "Developing Hospital Services" was approximately £10,300. Information on the staff costs associated with the production of the guide is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Water Authorities

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out in the Official Report a table showing the actual or estimated capital expenditure by each regional water authority on (a) urban flood protection, (b) agricultural flood protection and (c) sea defences for the years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mrs. Fenner: Details of each water authority's planned expenditure on the three categories, described by the hon. member, are shown in the following table in the form submitted to the Ministry before the beginning of the relevant year. Limits on the level of expenditure that could attract grant aid were imposed for 1984-85 and 1985-86 after these plans had been drawn up. The actual levels of expenditure will therefore be less than these plans indicate and are likely to be in line with the grant earning ceiling shown for these years.

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out in the Official Report a table showing the grant-earning ceilings and rates of grant payable under the Land Drainage Act 1976 for each regional water authority in the years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested is set out in the table on the basis of water authority divisions. Grant earning ceilings are notified to authorities before the beginning of the year to which they relate. They may be adjusted during the year in the light of changing needs. Grant rates are based provisionally on grant earning ceilings, but after the end of the year are re-calculated on actual expenditure.

DEFENCE

Community Service

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to creating some form of community service under the auspices of his Department; what discussions he has had on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We have no plans to establish a form of community service under the auspices of the Ministry of Defence.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the report of the inter-departmental study of the effects on service men and other Government employees of the giving of boarding school allowance for tax purposes.

Mr. Lee: This matter is still under consideration by the relevant Departments. Thus, I cannot at present add to my statement of 29 January 1985 at column 146.

RAF Flying Time

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to impose restrictions on RAF training flying time during 1985-86; and what assessment he has made of the implications for pilot training courses.

Mr. Lee: In order to help contain RAF expenditure within the funding available for 1985-86 it will be necessary to impose some restrictions on general flying acivities. While this may necessitate some adjustment to the timing and content of certain flying training courses, the essential throughput of crews to the front line will be maintained.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Norman Shaw North Issue Office

Mr. White asked the Lord Privy Seal if the Services Committee will consider extending the opening hours of the Norman Shaw North issue office from 8.00 am to 10.00 pm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Biffen: An extension of the opening hours of the Norman Shaw issue office would involve a number of problems of staffing and organisation. I do not believe that the current demand is sufficient to warrant the expense which would be incurred.

Members' Offices

Mr. White asked the Lord Privy Seal how many hon. Members have their offices in (a) the Norman Shaw South building, (b) the Cloisters, (c) 3 Deans yard, and (d) 2 Abbey gardens; and how this compares with each year since 1975.

Mr. Biffen: Fifty-eight hon. Members have their offices in Norman Shaw South building, 37 in the Cloisters, 25 in 3, Deans yard and 21 in 2, the Abbey gardens. This compares with:

	Norman Shaw South Building	Cloisters	3, Deans yard	2, the Abbey gardens

Private Members' Bills

Mr. White asked the Lord Privy Seal how many hours were spent on each Private Member's Bill which received the Royal Assent in each Session since 1955.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to introduce annual cervical cancer screening for women who work in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: I have asked the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee to examine the need for such a service and the feasibility of introducing it.

Foreign and Commonwealth Questions

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Lord Privy Seal whether any revision is proposed for the arrangements for Foreign and Commonwealth Office questions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: As a result of representations from right hon. and hon. Members, and following consultations through the usual channels, it is proposed that after the Easter recess for an experimental period, oral questions to Foreign and Commonwealth Ministers will no longer be divided between those related to European Community affairs and those relating to the rest of the world. Questions on the European Community will be dealt with in the same way as those tabled on other matters. The present arrangements for answering Overseas Development questions will not be altered.

The experiment will last until the summer recess to allow an opportunity for its success to be evaluated. Further discussions will then take place through the usual channels to determine whether the new arrangements should become permanent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the equivalent of the employers' current percentage pay offer to teachers if each teacher were to be offered the same amount of money.

Sir Keith Joseph: Based on the latest assessment of pay costs by the employers' secretariat, it is estimated that the 4 per cent. pay offer if divided equally among all teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales, would produce an increase of about £390 per annum on basic pay for each full-time teacher.

Research Councils

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if Her Majesty's Government will assist research councils to obtain commissioned research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The research councils are already free to undertake research on a contract basis, subject only to their following Government guidelines on charging. These guidelines are intended to ensure that the council's rates for commissioned research reflect the full cost of the work undertaken. Income from commissioned research to the five research councils is estimated to be some £80 million in 1984-85 or 12 per cent. of their total estimated gross expenditure. Most of the commissioned work which the research councils carry out is for Government Departments. In accordance with the customer-contractor principle set out in Cmnd. 5046 "Framework for Government R & D" (July 1972) each Government Department is individually responsible for defining its requirements for Research & Development to back its policy objectives and for commissioning research accordingly from the research councils. However, my right hon. Friend is consulted by his colleagues over any porposal to make significant changes in the scale of their commissioned research programmes.

Within the above figures, commissions from industry are estimated to be worth some £5 million in 1984-85. The Government's policy is to encourage the research councils to collaborate more closely with industry and generally to attract more funding from provate sector sources. To this end, the Government have announced the ending of the British Technology Group's right of first refusal to exploit the findings of research funded by the research councils and is introducing new arrangements which will give academic researchers greater incentive to exploit the commercial potential of their inventions.

My right hon. Friend, in announcing the grants-in aid for the research councils for 1985-86, explained that in some cases these grants-in-aid include money intended to help the council concerned to restructure. Such restructuring should increase the councils' flexibility and hence their ability to secure new commissions.

Heart Disease (Research)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the effect on research into heart disease if the Medical Research Council ceases funding of the British Regional Heart Study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Further information on risk factors in ischaemic heart disease, which might have resulted from an extension of funding of the cohort study in the British regional heart study, may not now be obtained unless an alternative source of funding to the Medical Research Council can be found. I understand that nevertheless the MRC has provided additional funds amounting to £30,000 to allow the analysis of the results of the cohort study to be completed.

The MRC makes a substantial contribution, with the universities and the medical research charities, to the support of research into cardio-vascular disease. In 1983-84 the council's expenditure on projects relevant to this type of disease amounted to £4·1 million, while a total of £10·3 million was spent on projects which might prove relevant.

Attendance and Welfare Services

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to issue the proposed circular on school attendance and educational welfare services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Copies of the draft circular were sent yesterday to the local authority and teacher associations and other relevant organisations together with an invitation to them to comment by the end of June. The draft circular analyses the functions of education welfare services, recommends priorities and approaches for them to adopt, and invites authorities to review the services in their area. its main purpose is to focus the work of the services more sharply on school attendance. It announces my intention to seek detailed information from local authorities towards the end of next year about their arrangements for giving effect to the recommendations in the draft circular, and to set in hand national consultations on the training of education welfare officers. Copies of the document have been placed in the Library.

WALES

Williams Bros., Cross Hands

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what offers of alternative sites have been made to Williams Bros., Cross Hands, in consequence of his Department's plans to construct the Cross Hands bypass;

(2) whether, during its negotiations with Williams Bros., Cross Hands, in respect of plans to construct a bypass at Cross Hands, his Department was aware that the company intended to terminate its operations;

(3) what compensation has been negotiated with Williams Bros., Cross Hands, as a result of the plans to construct the Cross Hands bypass;

(4) when his Department informed Williams Bros., Cross Hands, that all its buildings would have to be demolished in order to construct the Cross Hands bypass.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The firm would have first become formally aware that the road proposals would affect its premises when draft orders were published in 1981 and later when further draft orders, to provide for some amendments to the scheme, were published in 1983.

Our Department has been made aware that the firm intends to close though we understand that it has been offered an alternative site on the nearby industrial estate.

Compensation is still the subject of negotiation.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make funds available to co-ordinate, computerise and update the address system for the screening of cervical cancer in area health authorities in Wales as recommended by the current working party.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A programme of computerising family practitioner committees' records is under way and is being centrally funded. South Glamorgan and Gwent FPCs already have computers and a further four committees will be provided with them by the end of 1985-86. This should facilitate both the initial call-up of women in the priority groups for screening and their subsequent recall. However, a working group comprising officials of the Department and representatives of the Health Service in Wales is being set up to examine and report on the effectiveness of the present arrangements which are detailed in WHC(81)19 and WHC(84)14. I shall consider what further action may be necessary in the light of the working group's findings.

THE ARTS

North-West England (Provision)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will list the successes of his Department in providing for the arts in the north-west of England in the last year.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1985, c. 517]: Provision for the performing arts in the north-west is in the hands of the Arts Council of Great Britain, North West Arts and Merseyside Arts. Eight major theatre companies, two symphony orchestras, a ballet company and a very wide range of other arts bodies are maintained in the region. The Arts Council also funded a sculpture exhibition at the Liverpool garden festival. Arts activities were well supported by most of the local authorities in the region.

The Arts Council will shortly announce the grant of additional development money to the two regional arts associations, and to arts bodies in the region, as a part of its "Glory of the Garden" strategy.

On 8 March, phase I of the "Tate in the North" project for a major gallery in Liverpool was announced. My right hon. and noble Friend is making £0·5 million available for this gallery.

TRANSPORT

Rail Closure Proposal (West Midlands)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many objections have been received to British Rail's proposal to close the line between Henley in Arden and Bearley junction.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the transport users consultative committee for the west midlands has received over 7,000 objections to the proposal.

Departmental Accounting Procedures

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what accounting developments are being made in his Department in order to give line managers better information about the cost and conditions of the capital assets they are helping to manage.

Mr. Ridley: The Department is developing management accounting systems for its major executive activities. Improvements have also been made to the technical and management procedures for assessing the current condition and cost of maintaining the capital assets, notably the national road system and its bridges.

EMPLOYMENT

Careers Services

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are taken to ensure that those directly recruited through the statutory agencies to youth training schemes are notified to the careers services; and if he considers that sufficient information is given by the Manpower Services Commission to the careers services through the Spectrum computer system.

Mr. Peter Morrison: When a young person is recruited to the youth training scheme directly by a managing agent the Manpower Services Commission automatically notifies the careers office and jobcentre responsible for recruitment to that particular scheme.

The Manpower Services Commission and my Department are currently conducting a review of the arrangements whereby Spectrum information on young people entering the youth training scheme is sent by the commission to the local careers service.

Visual Display Units (Health Hazards)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will institute research concerning health hazards caused through working with visual display units.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive is already engaged in a number of studies on the possible health problems from VDUs and further research is being considered.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning possible health hazards caused by working with visual display units.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive has received many inquiries, at national and local level, from employers, trade unions, members of the public and others about the possible health effects of VDUs.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each West Yorkshire travel-to-work area (a) the total number of registered unemployed in January 1985, (b) the percentage of the population that represents, (c) the increase (a) and (b) represent over December 1984, (d) the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in January 1985, (e) the comparative figures for January 1983 and (f) the comparative figures for January 1981.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information, which is also in the Library, is as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

President Mubarak

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on her meeting with the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt.

The Prime Minister: I had useful talks with President Mubarak of Egypt on 14 March: these reflected the excellent state of Anglo-Egyptian relations. We had a full discussion of Arab-Israel peace efforts. I expressed the Government's support for the President's efforts, and those of King Hussein, to make progress towards a negotiated settlement. We both expressed acute concern about the situation in Lebanon, and in Sudan.

Ministry of Technology

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received from the Confederation of British Industry and the Institute of Directors about the case for a Ministry of Technology.

The Prime Minister: I have received no such representations.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. McNamara asked the Prime Minister if she will list the differences between the regulations introducing a limited list of drugs prescribable on the National Health Service (a) in England and Wales and (b) in Scotland; if she will explain the reasons for these differences; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There are three main differences between the schedules of products not prescribable under the National Health Service in the regulations introducing the selected list in (a) England and Wales, and (b) Scotland. Vicks Coldcare capsules and Guaiphenesin syrup have been omitted from the Scottish schedule; Vicks inhaler has been omitted from the English and Welsh one. These differences and a number of minor spelling mistakes are all typographical errors. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has already told the House that amending regulations will be laid to correct these errors.

Official Papers (Disclosure)

Mr. Warren asked the Prime Minister if she considers each application for an extension of the 30-year list in the disclosure of official papers; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958, as amended, applications for extended closure of records are considered by the Lord Chancellor. The criteria for longer periods than that of 30 years are set out in Cmnd. 8531 and are as follows:

i) exceptionally sensitive papers, the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest whether on security or other grounds (including the need to safeguard the Revenue);
ii) documents containing information supplied in confidence the disclosure of which would or might constitute a breach of good faith;
iii) documents containing information about individuals the disclosure of which would cause distress to or endanger living persons or their immediate descendants.

Supplementary Employment Grant

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister what consideration she has given to the proposals, sent to her in January by the Association of Directors of Social Services, for a new form of supplementary employment grant for the employment of additional staff to care for the elderly, the sick, the physically and mentally handicapped, the mentally ill and other needful groups; what response she is making; if there is any action she will be taking; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The proposals have been given careful consideration by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Employment and Health and Social Security and a reply will be sent to the association shortly.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Sir Philip Holland asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any plans as part of their present policy of reducing the number of non-departmental public bodies to abolish the Commission for Racial Equality, the Community Projects Foundation, the consumer councils, the development corporations, the Equal Opportunities Commission, the industrial training boards, and the research councils; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 21 March 1985, c. 570]: Target dates have been announced for the abolition of all new town development corporations in England and Wales. The New Town Development Corporations in Scotland and the Urban Development Corporations in England will be abolished when the tasks for which they were set up have been completed. The Government have no plans to abolish the Equal Opportunities Commission, the Commission for Racial Equality, the Community Projects Foundation, the National Consumer Council, the Nationalised Industry Consumers' Councils, the research councils and the remaining industrial training boards. But all these bodies are subject to thorough examination at intervals in accordance with the new review arrangements for non-departmental public bodies which I announced on 19 November 1984 at column 57.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Unit Labour Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in unit labour costs since (a) May 1979 and (b) January 1983 to the latest available date in the United States of America, the United Kingdom, West Germany and Japan.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Member to the "Main Economic Indicators", including the "Historical Statistics", published by the OECD.

Pound (Value)

Mr. White asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the real value of the pound sterling at the latest date, compared with its value on 1 March 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The value of sterling on the dates referred to, expressed as an index against the basket of major currencies (£ ERI), was as follows:

*£ sterling exchange rate index 1975 = 100

Date
1 March 1975	105·1
1 March 1976	95·4
1 March 1977	80·7

18 March 1985‡	72·5

* Unless stated otherwise, all figures are based on closing London market rates.
† 1 March fell on a weekend.
‡ Noon index.

Post-tax Profits

Mr. McKelvey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the post-tax profits of the following sectors expressed as a percentage of gross national product in 1970, 1975, 1980 and the latest available date (a) manufacturing industry, (b) financial institutions, and (c) oil companies.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985, c. 397]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

CIVIL SERVICE

Senior Civil Servants

Mr. Eggar asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list by Department the number of civil servants at principal and assistant secretary level who have resigned voluntarily from the service in each of the years 1980 to 1984; and if he will state their age at date of resignation and number of years service.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Asset Registers

Mr. Wainwright asked the Minister for the Civil Service, in respect of the current study by the Management and Personnel Office of asset registers, what types of assets are covered, which Departments are expected to benefit, and when the study will be completed.

Mr. Hayhoe: The only current study by the Management and Personnel Office which touches on this area is the multi-Department review of the management of Government office accommodation in Departments, which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 1 August 1984 at column 263. But this review is covering only inventories of furniture and other minor items. It is expected to be complete by May 1985 and its recommendations, if accepted, will be applicable to all Departments.

ENERGY

Departmental Staff

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many of the officials, including scientists, who advise him on nuclear energy matters, in each grade from principal upwards, have previously worked in the nuclear power industry and how many officials have left his Department in the past 10 years to take up jobs in the nuclear power industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: Four officials in the Department of Energy who advise me on nuclear energy matters have previously worked in the nuclear power industry, assuming this to include the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority but not the electricity supply industry. These are one grade 3, one grade 6 and two principal scientific officers. The Department will also shortly be employing, on a temporary basis, a number of consultants, some of whom will have worked in the nuclear power industry, to advise on the content and monitoring of the AEA's research and development programmes following the outcome of the AEA Review which were announced on 11 February 1985 at columns 30-33.

No official has left the Department to take up a job in the nuclear power industry in the past 10 years. (Sir Walter Marshall was already deputy chairman of the AEA when he ceased to be the chief scientist at the Department in 1977.)

Nuclear Reprocessing Plants

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy which United Kingdom nuclear reprocessing plants (a) are and (b) are not subject to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Goodlad: No reprocessing plants in the United Kingdom are currently subject to routine inspection by the IAEA.

The reprocessing plant at Dounreay was at one time designated for routine inspection but the agency has chosen to remove it from the list of designated facilities.

Plutonium

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is satisfied that all plutonium produced in the United Kingdom is properly accounted for; and what procedures are adopted in the event of discrepancies being discovered.

Mr. Goodlad: All users of civil plutonium are required by community safeguards legislation to account for all inventory changes to the Euratom safeguards directorate, and to make routine declarations of such changes.

In addition the United Kingdom has published figures for material unaccounted for at UKAEA and BNFL sites on an annual basis since 1977. These figures show no adverse trends and give rise to no concern over either safety or security of operations at United Kingdom sites.

SCOTLAND

Students, Apprentices and Trainees

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures showing for 1982-83, 1983-84 and an estimate for 1984-85, the numbers of (a) full-time students, (b) part-time students, (c) full-time trainees, (d) apprentices and (e) trainees on day release courses.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information for 1982-83 and 1983-84 is given in the following table. Estimates are not yet available for 1984-85. Information on full-time trainees is not available.

Students and Trainees	1982-83	1983-84
(a) Full-time students	103,200	103,500
(b) Part-time students (excluding those on day release courses)	118,100	116,700
(d) Apprentices	*50,800
(e) Trainees on day release courses	65,300	61,900

* Number at Spring 1983 (1983 Labour Force Survey).

Housing

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of houses in (a) Glasgow and (b) Scotland which lack the following amenities (i) inside sanitation, (ii) a fixed bath or shower or (iii) a wash-hand basin.

Mr. Ancram: The numbers of households in permanent dwellings lacking amenities are as follows:

	Glasgow	Scotland
Households lacking:
(a) inside sanitation (WC)	2,629	16,175
(b) fixed bath or shower	9,868	38,403

Source: 1981 Census.

Information on the numbers of households lacking a wash-hand basin is not available.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the working of the Solvent Abuse (Scotland) Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Considerable use is being made of the Act in areas where solvent abuse has been regarded as a particular problem. More time will be required, however, to assess the effectiveness of the Act in relation to the reported incidence of this practice.

Students (Fees)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will announce the fees to be charged to students attending Scottish institutions other than universities in the academic year 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: For the academic year 1985-86, I have prescribed the following fee levels for home students and for students from other European Community countries on full-time advanced courses in the central institutions and the colleges of education (fees for 1984-85 are shown in parentheses):

Postgraduate courses	1,632	(1,569)
Undergraduate and equivalent courses	520	(500)

Fees for home and European Community students on courses at local authority colleges are the responsibility of the local authorities. I understand that the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has decided to recommend fees as follows:

Postgraduate courses	1,632	(1,569)
Advanced full-time courses	520	(500)
Non-advanced full-time courses	265	(220)

For overseas students the Government's policy is that students who began their courses on or after 1 September 1980 should pay fees that cover the cost of their education. Local authorities and institutions are free to determine the fees to be charged in accordance with that policy, and in the light of their own circumstances.

I understand that the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has decided to recommend to local authorities the following fees for students at local authority colleges paying the overseas rate who began their courses on or after 1 September 1980.

Advanced courses	3,310
Non-advanced courses	1,820

Any students still on courses that began before 1 September 1980 remain entitled to a subsidised rate of fee. Maximum fees for such students were specified in the Education (Fees and Awards) (Amendment) Act 1984. As there will be few, if any, such students left by 1985-86, I have decided not to revise the fee maxima further. They will therefore remain as follows:

Postgraduate courses	2,148
Undergraduate courses	1,653
Non-advanced (full-time) courses	885

Assisted Places Scheme

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what parental income scale will apply to the assisted places scheme in school session 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: I propose to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contributions in relation to family income. Examples of the proposed income scales are as follows:

Relevant income £	Parental contribution £
6,376	Nil
6,410	18
6,500	24
7,000	78
7,500	144
8,000	219
8,500	300
9,000	405
9,500	510
10,000	615
10,500	732
11,000	852
11,500	972
12,000	1,092
12,500	1,233
13,000	1,398
13,500	1,563
14,000	1,728
14,500	1,893
15,000	2,058

The relevant income scale is open ended but fee remission can of course be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fees.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for local authority current expenditure for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88 expenditure both as an amount and as a percentage change cover 1978-79 expressed in (a) cash, (b) volume and (c) cost terms.

Mr. Younger [pursuant to his reply, 21 March 1985, c. 611]: The information is as follows:

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
(a) Cash terms
Total expenditure (£ million)	1,428	1,704	2,155	2,402	2,578	2,738	2,873	2,889	(2,929)	(2,958)
Growth from 1978-79 (per cent.)	—	+19·3	+50·9	+68·2	+80·5	+91·7	+101·2	+102·3	—	—
(b) Volume Terms (November 1984 prices)
Total expenditure (£ million)	2,801	2,835	2,877	2,837	2,817	2,859	2,874	—	—	—
Growth from 1978-79 (per cent.)	—	+1·2	+2·7	+1·3	+0·6	+2·1	+2·6	—	—	—
(c) Cost terms (1983-84 prices)
Total expenditure (£ million)	2,425	2,475	2,639	2,675	2,692	2,738	2,743	2,639	(2,573)	(2,517)
	—	+2·1	+8·8	+10·3	+11·0	+12·9	+13·1	+3·8	—	—

Notes:

1. The figures for 1978-79 to 1983-84 are final or near final outturns: those for 1984-85 are authorities' budget estimates. The figures for 1985-86 to 1987-88 are the Government's provision for forward years.
2. All figures, except those for 1986-87 and 1987-88, are on the basis of relevant expenditure for rate support grant purposes, excluding loan charges. The figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 also exclude provision for capital financed from current revenue and interest on revenue balances, the precise amounts of which are yet to be determined. It is therefore not possible to compare figures for these two years with those for 1978-79.
3. The cash figures to 1984-85 have been converted to November 1984 prices using factors agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. It is not possible to convert cash information for later years on the same basis.
4. Cost terms figures are cash outturns, plans or provision adjusted to a 1983-84 price base using the GDP deflator.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests for additional resources to be spent on housing to reduce overcrowding and substandard living conditions he has received from each of the metropolitan county councils.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has received a number of requests from local housing authorities for additional housing investment programme resources but none from metropolitan county councils, which are not housing authorities.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions he intends to make for the replacement of older housing as it outlives its economically usable life; and what guidelines he intends to issue to housing authorities to ensure that best value and habitable life from dwelling stocks result from housing investment programmes.

Sir George Young: It is for individual authorities to decide on their own priorities for housing investment within the total resources available to them. The balance to be struck between rehabilitation and demolition followed by a new building will be discussed in the consultation paper following the Government's recent review of improvement policy, which will be published shortly.

Local Authorities (Government Communications)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the circulars, (b) the circular letters, (c) the statutory instruments (standing orders) and (d) other communications, sent to all authorities, or all authorities in a class, by his Department in England in each year for 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I shall answer this question shortly.

Agricultural Rating (Yield)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his Department's most recent estimate of the likely yield of rating on agricultural land and buildings.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Some £360 million, based on the average non-domestic rate poundage for England and Wales in 1984-85. However, the figure is likely to exaggerate the total cost of agricultural derating since rate poundages in agricultural areas are generally lower than the national average.

House of Commons (Contract Cleaners)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the companies currently involved in the cleaning of the House of Commons.

Sir George Young: There is only one company, Exclusive Cleaning and Maintenance (London) Ltd., currently engaged in the internal cleaning of the House.

Bluebell Railway

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what dates the public inquiry into the planning aspects of the proposed extension of the Bluebell Railway took place; on what date the inspector delivered his report to him; and when he expects to announce his decision.

Mr. Macfarlane: The public inquiry was held between 21 June and 6 July 1983. The inspector considered jointly the planning appeal submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and also an application for a light railway order made to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The inspector's report, which dealt with both matters, was received on 2 November 1983. It is expected that the decision letters relating to both the planning appeal and the light railway order will be dispatched in the near future.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of sales completed under the right to buy or voluntary procedures for each year since 1979 to the latest available date by York city council; and how this level of sales compares with the national average.

Sir George Young: Sales in the years 1980-81 to 1983-84 reported by York, appear in issues 62, 63, 67 and 71 respectively of "Local Housing Statistics"; copies are available in the Library. In 1979-80, 164 dwellings were sold and in April to December 1984 161.

Total sales from April 1979 to December 1984 were 1,414, equivalent to 13 per cent. of York's council housing stock at April 1984: in England as a whole, local authority sales were 13·6 per cent. of its April 1984 stock.

Departmental Housing Booklet

Mr. Lawrance asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make his Department's housing booklet No. 18, "Housing Defects: Help for Private Owners," available to local authorities.

Mr. Gow: My Department is consulting the local authority associations on the text of the booklet and I hope that it will be published shortly.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the average rate poundage for Conservative-controlled county councils for the years 1981-82 and 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The average precept poundage for county councils that are Conservative-controlled was 112·9p in 1981-82 and is estimated to be 148·5p in 1985-86.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the average rate poundage for all county councils on England for the years 1981-82 and 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The available information is as follows:

	1981-82	1985-86
Non-metropolitan county councils	114·7p*	157·3p
Metropolitan county councils	39·2p*	55·1p

* Including any supplementary precepts levied.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the rate poundage fixed by the Isle of Wight county council for the years 1981-82 and 1985-86; and what percentage increase over these four years they represent.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Isle of Wight county precept was 113·5p in 1981-82 and has been set at 157·0p for 1985-86. This represents a 38 per cent. increase over the four-year period.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage increase in rate poundage approved by the conservative-controlled county councils between the years 1981-82 and 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The available information is as follows:

Percentage increases in precept poundages by Conservative-controlled county councils between 1981-82 and 1985-86

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average amount charged to a householder for general rates in the city of Chichester, West Sussex, the boroughs of Camden and Westminster and the borough of Medina, Isle of Wight in the year 1984-85.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Estimates are as follows:

Average domestic rate bills in 1984-85

Camden	723
Westminster	701
Medina	252

House of Commons Sittings (Cost)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the figures given in reply to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving), Official Report, 25 April 1984, column 526, regarding the total additional cost to his Department of the House sitting from (a) 10.30 pm to midnight and (b) from midnight to 2 am; and if he will give similar estimates for such periods after 2 am as figures are conveniently available.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 21 March 1985]: The figures for additional labour costs to my Department given in my answer of 25 April 1984 remain valid. After 2 am additional labour costs amount to £30 per hour until the normal day staff come on duty. The additional heating and lighting costs are now estimated to be about £345 for the period between 11 pm and midnight, and £135 per hour after midnight.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Relative Export Prices

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report the change in relative export prices each year from 1955 onwards based on 1970 weights compared with the latest figure, together with the ratio of the annual percentage growth of imports to the percentage growth of exports of manufactures.

Mr. Channon: Data prior to 1963 are not readily available, and to derive UK relative export prices based on 1970 weights would incur disproportionate cost. The available information based on 1980=100 is in the table.

UK Trade in Manufactures

British Leyland (Bathgate Plant)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with British Leyland on the future of its Bathgate plant.

Mr. Butcher: The closure of Bathgate was proposed by the BL board in its 1984 corporate plan, which was discussed in detail between the Department of Trade and Industry and BL. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has subsequently had regular and continuing discussions with the company about future uses for the facilities concerned.

Telecommunications (Criggion)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement as to the nature of telecommunications facilities at Criggion.

Mr. Butcher: The nature of the telecommunications facilities at Criggion is the responsibility of British Telecommunications plc.

British Aerospace

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the costs of the intended sale of shares in British Aerospace.

Mr. Pattie: Progress on the sale of the Government's shareholding in British Aerospace was reported on 13 March in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) at columns 150-51. Pending parliamentary approval of the necessary estimates urgent payments in connection with preliminary and main sale expenses will be met from repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

British Telecom Shares

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he made it a condition of the placing of British Telecom shares with Kleinwort Benson prior to privatisation that no employees of the firm should deal in the shares on their own account;

(2) if, before settling his final account with Kleinwort Benson in respect of the privatisation of British Telecom, he will seek from the firm information on the number of its employees who used the firm's facilities to deal on their own account in the shares.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 18 March 1985, c. 346]: It has not been the Government's practice to seek to impose restrictions on applications by employees of principal advisers in share issues and this was not made a condition for Kleinwort Benson or any other professional advisers in the British Telecom sale. Kleinwort Benson's own policy was to allow employees to apply for British Telecom shares on the same basis as members of the public. The employees were subject to the same basis of allocation as the public and no employees received more than 800 shares.

BL Cars

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the progress made by the BL board in carrying out its intention stated in September 1983 of seeking further private sector funds over the next two years within its mainstream business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 20 March 1985, c. 505]: I am pleased with the privatisation of Jaguar in July 1984 and look forward to further progess in the privatisation of BL when I shall make statements as appropriate.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Drug Addiction

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research he has conducted to investigate whether fears expressed by drugs specialists that television advertising campaigns against drug addiction could lead to more youngsters experimenting with drugs are well founded.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) on 18 March at columns 376-78.

Personal Social Services

Ms. Harriet Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the rate of change in real net personal social services spending for each of the years 1979-80 to 1984-85; and what was the average annual rate of such change over that period as a whole for each of the following categories of social services authorities (a) all such authorities, (b) rate-capped authorities, (c) authorities in penalty but not rate-capped in 1985-86, (d) rate-capped authorities and authorities in penalty in 1985-86 and (e) authorities which are neither rate-capped nor in penalty in 1985-86, giving outturn figures where available and budget estimates otherwise.

Mr. John Patten: The rate of change in personal social services net current expenditure by all local authorities in England for each year from 1979-80 to 1984-85 is as follows:

	Cash (per cent.)	Economic cost (per cent.)
1979-80 to 1980-81	+23·8	+4·5
1980-81 to 1981-82	+10·9	+0·9
1981-82 to 1982-83	+9·8	+2·9
1982-83 to 1983-84	+8·2	+3·6
1983-84 to 1984-85	+7·4	+2·5

Details of local authority budgets for 1985-86 are not yet available, so it is not possible to give information relating to authorities budgeting to incur penalties in 1985-86. Average annual rates of change 1979-80 to 1984-85 for the other categories listed are as follows:

	Cash (per cent.)	Economic cost (per cent.)
Rate-capped authorities	+16·4	+3·9
Non rate-capped authorities	+14·8	+2·9
All English authorities	+15·0	+3·0

Kidney Machines

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many kidney machines can be purchased for the National Health Service for £1 million.

Mr. John Patten: The capital cost of a kidney machine is between £6,000 and £8,000 according to specifications, so the number that could be purchased for £1 million would be between 125 and 167. The major cost of haemodialysis provision is, however, the revenue expenditure on staffing, drugs, fluids and other consumables. Machines may be used by more than one patient, but the revenue cost of each patient is in the region of £10,000 a year and can be as high as £16,000.

War Widows

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for the district authorities of Devon and Cornwall, such information as he has about the individual councils' policies regarding the disregard of war widows' pensions when making calculations for rent and rate rebates.

Mr. Whitney: Under the housing benefit regulations all local authorities are required to disregard the first £4 of a war widow's pension or war disablement pension when assessing a rent or rate rebate. They have discretion to disregard a higher amount under a local variation of the statutory scheme. Information on how that discretion is used by individual authorities is not collected centrally.

Benefits

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to improve computer systems in his Department's offices dealing with benefits payable to pensioners, war pensioners and parents receiving family allowances.

Mr. Whitney: Our plans to improve the administration of the social security programme through the application of new technology are embraced within the social security operational strategy, on which a consultative document was published in 1982. This is a managerial and conceptual framework within which a series of projects, involving both the improvement of existing computer systems and the design of new ones, are being developed.

The payment and record-keeping of retirement pensions and widows' pensions and of child benefit are at present handled centrally by the Department's computer installation at Newcastle. The computer system for dealing with retirement pensions and widow's pensions is currently being redesigned to provide assessment as well as payment services starting in 1988. The child benefit system will be similarly redesigned to give an improved service in the early part of the next decade. In the meantime work is well advanced on two small scale projects to provide staff in Newcastle central office with on-line access to the records of recipients of these benefits and on the computerisation of the child benefit index. These will provide a better inquiry facility and a more efficient service.

Work on war pensions is handled centrally by a computer system at the Department's North Fylde central office and we have no plans at present for major changes to the system.

Pensioners and child benefit recipients may also receive supplementary benefit which is paid through local offices. For our plans to introduce computer systems to these offices I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 7 March at column 602.

Newham General Hospital

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how often wards in Newham general hospital have been closed; for what period; and for what reasons;

(2) how many wards in Newham general hospital have been closed in each week since the hospital opened;

(3) how many consultant geriatricians are based at Newham general hospital;

(4) how many agency staff, and in what jobs, have been employed in Newham general hospital in each week since the hospital opened.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect detailed local information of this kind centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the Newham health authority for the details he requires.

Geriatric Care (Newham)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many elderly people in the London borough of Newham are awaiting admission for geriatric hospital care.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 30 September 1984, the latest date for which information is available, there were no recorded inpatient waiting list cases in Newham health authority for admission to the specialty of geriatric medicine.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many geriatric beds are available, and in which hospitals, in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The latest available figures are given in the table.

NHS hospitals run by Newham District Health Authority with beds available in the specialty of geriatric medicine

Hospital	Average daily number of available beds in 1983
Plaistow Hospital	88·0
St. Andrew's Hospital*	84·3
Albert Dock Seaman's Hospital	0·1
Total	172·4

* Located outside the London Borough of Newham.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds in Newham general hospital have been used for private patients in each week since the hospital opened.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From the opening of the hospital in June 1983 to the end of that year, there were six private inpatient cases treated in Newham general hospital.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to change the upper age limit for initial claims for mobility allowance;

(2) if he has any plans to change the upper age limit for eligibility to claim mobility allowance.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 4 February at column 452.

Social Security Payments (Savings)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the savings in social security payments which will partly offset the cost of the employment and training proposals for 16 and 17-year-olds, set out in the Budget statement;

(2) if he will detail the areas identified for savings in social security payments which will partly offset the cost of the employment and training proposals for 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds set out in the Budget statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Government's decision to promote a substantial expansion of the youth training scheme will diminish the need for young people to claim supplementary benefit. There will be reductions in social security expenditure, therefore, as 16 and 17-year-olds take up places under the expanded youth training scheme and receive training allowances or wages instead of supplementary benefit. The current estimate of the savings in supplementary benefit is £65 million in 1986-87 and £130 million in 1987-88.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 75

SESSION 1984–85

11th March—22nd March 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speakers ruling and statement'.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading 'Speaker'.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of the volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
